BE CONTENTED.

A man in his carriage was riding along,
A gally-dressed wife by his side;
In satin and laces she looked like a queen,
And he like a king in his pride.

A wood-sawyer stood on the street as they passed;
The carriage and couple he eyed,
And said, as he worked with his saw on a log,
"I wish I was rich and could ride."

The man in the carriage remarked to his wife,
"One thing I would give if I could—
I'd give my wealth for the strength and the health
Of the man who is sawing the wood."

A pretty young maid with a bundle of work,
Whose face as the morning was fair,
Went tripping along with a smile of delight
While humming a love-breathing air.

She looked on the carriage, the lady she saw,
Arrayed in apparel so fine,
And said in a whisper, "I wish from my heart
Those satins and laces were mine."

The lady looked out on the maid with her work,
So fair in her calico dress,
And said, "I'd relinquish position and wealth
Her beauty and youth to possess."

Thus it is in the world, whatever our law,
Our minds and our time we employ
In longing and sighing for what we have not,
Ungrateful for what we enjoy.

A CURL PAPER ROMANCE.

The Girl Who Fixed Her Back Hair Won the Beau and is Happy.

A well-dressed young gentleman of about thirty years of age presented his card to the head of one of the largest business houses of Louisville, Ky. He represented a house in a neighboring city, and was accorded a cordial reception. After getting through with the business in hand the merchant was so prepossessed with the agent that he asked the pleasure of introducing him to his family at dinner the same day. The invitation was modestly and thankfully accepted, and after a few remarks the gentleman separated to meet at an appointed place and hour. The merchant immediately informed his wife of the intended visit, that she might make suitable arrangements for the entertainment of the expected guest. It was a warm day, just the sort of a day to keep away from extensive toilets and new acquaintances. So indignation followed the announcement that a guest was coming, and the daughters declared that they would neither take their hair out of curl papers nor change their gowns for other garments. This in consideration of the paternal ancestry furnished food for conversation for the next four hours, and by time for dinner the sweet girls had entered into a solemn compact that they would not only look as ugly as possible, but did not intend to say "a single word" to the horrid stranger. They knew he would be old and uninteresting, and they didn't care any way. Finally the guest was announced and the young ladies, at least two of them, gloating over their independence, and each feeling every inch a martyr, floated to the parlor in their neglige costumes and were formally introduced to the stranger. But one of the sisters broke the compact entered into and appeared in a neat-fitting dress, with her hair becomingly arranged and forming a strong contrast to her more independent sisters. The dinner passed off without incident, the polite stranger making himself generally agreeable, but paying no especial attention to either of the three. Observing the etiquette of polite society, he called on the family the next evening, and after spending a brief hour with them left with the assurance that he would be welcomed at any time he might return to the city. The young ladies voted him "the nicest man" they had ever met, and the dear mother could talk of no one else.

Three or four days after this, while the father was engrossed in the details of business, one morning he came across a letter which banished all thoughts of trade and profit from his brain. It was from this young stranger. He asked permission to address his daughter. After worrying over the matter all the morning the father took the letter home and gave it to his wife. Not understanding it, she gave it to each of the daughters. They were as much startled as their parents. The divine stranger had previously given no intimations of any serious intentions, and had hardly had a word in private with any of them. There was a mystery somewhere. After giving the matter much consideration it was decided that the father should write the handsome stranger and ask of him plainly which one of the daughters he desired to address. The letter was written and mailed, and oh! the suspense and agitation of the next four days. No one who came to the door of the beautiful house could bring as much of interest to the occupants as the postman, and his coming was the one absorbing topic in that household. Finally, on the third morning there came a letter; it was postmarked from the city of the stranger, and the handwriting was much like that of the first. It was anxiously taken to the most private part of the house, and, with mother and daughters breathless with suppressed excitement, the seal was broken, the contents read, and the name of the fortunate girl disclosed. It was the one who had taken the pains to dress herself becomingly at the first dinner.

The letter was answered affirmatively; the young and ardent lover immediately returned to the city to begin the wooing of his lady-love. It was a short and an ardent courtship, and in the end he won his suit. After remaining for a week or ten days the gentleman returned home, got the free consent of his own parents, and the wedding-day was appointed. They were married in eight weeks and live in elegant style in a city not far from Louisville. The parents of the gentleman are wealthy and he is the only child.

An Angling Cat.

Henry Galliman owns a mill, and a man named Pruit attends to it. Pruit owns a large cat that, as soon as the mill is stopped by shutting down the gate, will immediately run down behind the mill and get on a log just over the sheeting over which the water is flowing. She will then look intently into the water, which is from eighteen inches to two feet deep, until she spies a fish; she then plunges into the water, frequently burying herself under it, but almost always coming out with a fish. She then quietly sits down on a rock near by and enjoys her meal.—Charleston Courier.

The Secret of True Happiness.

Somebody has said, what everybody has observed, that those persons who have attained to eminence in any vocation of life have followed a uniform course, that of earnest work and unwearied application. None are truly happy but those that are busy: for the only real happiness lies in useful work of some kind, either of the hand or the head, so long as overexertion of either is avoided. It should be the aim of every one to be employed. If all men and women were kept at some useful employment, there would be less sorrow and wickedness in the world.

Commercial Agents.

It is estimated that there are 240,000 commercial travelers in the United States. Each is supposed to go over his route five times a year, and to carry during that time a ton of baggage. This baggage being generally bulky, it would require 24,000 ten-ton cars to transport the trunks and outfits of these mobilized gentlemen. The commercial traveler is, therefore, a factor in the transportation problem as well as the strictly commercial transactions of the country.

WIT AND WISDOM.

A forthcoming event—One that succeeds three others.

The net to catch a man matrimonially—The brunette.

Delays make a bad beginning and a worse ending.

The longest life is too short to show us how little we know.

Play-tonic affection—Going out between the acts at a theater.

A man is wise only just in proportion that he knows himself.

Trifles are serious things, all our happiness and misery are made out of them.

"Every cloud has its silver linings." The boy who has the mumps can stay away from school.

Women are said to be always looking in the glass. Men seldom do, unless there is something to drink in it.

The worst error of the press—When you try to press the niece's foot under the table, and it turns out to be the aunt's.

Most people think if they could only live their lives over again they would do differently, but they would only be different fools at best.

When a man reaches the top of a stairway and attempts to take one step higher, the sensation is as perplexing as if he had attempted to kick a dog that wasn't there.

"Your father is entirely bald, isn't he?" said a man to a son of a millionaire. "Yes," replied the youth, sadly: "I'm the only heir he has left."

"Where were you born little girl?" asked a philanthropist of a street beggar. "I'm not sure, sir," was the reply, "but I've often heard my ma say that I was born in poverty."

"That artist is a friend of yours, is he not?" "Well, yes; he used to be, but one day he was fool enough to ask me how I liked his pictures, and I was fool enough to tell him."

"Is that about the right length, sir?" asked the skilful barber, as he finished cutting his customer's hair. "I like the sides and back," was the response, "but I wish you would make it a little longer on the top."

A German went into a restaurant, and as he took his seat an Irish waiter came up and bowed politely. "Wie ghets?" said the German, also bowing politely. "Wheat cakes," shouted the waiter mistaking the salutation for an order. "Nein, nein!" said the German. "Nine!" said the waiter. "You'll be lucky if you get three."

An Irishman was advised to take shower baths. A friend explained to him how to fit up one by the use of a cistern and cullender. Pat set to work and had the thing done at once. Subsequently he was met by the party who had given the advice, and on being asked how he enjoyed the baths, exclaimed: "Bedad, but it was foine; I enjoyed it greatly, and kept quite dhry, too!" Being asked how he managed to take the shower, and yet remain dry, he replied, "Sure now, ye didn't think I was going to stand under the water without an umbrella!"

A Goose Farm.

There is a goose ranch located on the eastern shore of Virginia, covering nearly 3,000 acres, over which the feathered occupants, nearly 5,000, are free to roam. The farm is devoted exclusively to producing the raw materials needed for the fine down quilts. Several species of geese are bred, all of them being, however, of American lineage. The largest specimens are the swan-geese, and the plumage of all is of snowy whiteness.

The birds are regularly fed with corn and other grains, and are given the utmost freedom consistent with the prevention of straying and loss. Herders are employed to keep a watchful eye on them, and sheds for shelter are provided in case of inclement or especially severe weather, but the birds rarely use them.

About every six weeks the plucking takes place. Only the breast and portions of the sides are touched, the feathers of the back, the wings and the tail being left intact. It requires nearly 100 average geese to furnish a pound of down, though the smaller feathers which are also taken, weigh much heavier. These feathers, however, form an entirely separate grade from the valuable down.

The average life of a goose is said to be about 40 years, and produce from 6 to 10 eggs per annum, a large proportion of which are hatched. A bird hatched in February is in condition for plucking the following August, and so on therefore every 6 or 8 weeks. The feathers are packed in sacks, and sent to the Philadelphia factory, where they are trimmed, washed, steamed, and otherwise prepared for their ultimate uses.

Label the Little Ones.

The anxiety so often caused by the wandering away of a little child from his usual familiar surroundings, or his being separated from his parents in a crowd, says a writer in Babyhood, is made unnecessarily distressing by the fact that usually he carries with him no certain means of identification. To label him with his full name and address would be so simple a precaution that it is surprising that it is not a universal practice. We brand our cattle, punch cabalistic characters in the web feet of our fowls, engrave dog collars, and scrupulously tag umbrellas and bunches of keys, while giving hardly a passing thought to what would happen to our little speechless toddlers and ourselves should they stray into unknown streets or meet with some accident in the domains of strangers. In the customary marking of undergarments with indelible ink it would be but little more trouble to use the full name instead of initials, and on outer garments a convenient place could be selected—say the inside of the collar-band or of the end of the sleeve—where the full address could be placed. If every reader of Babyhood would adopt such a plan and recommend it to others there would be at once a beginning go far toward establishing a uniform custom, the usefulness of which would seem to be beyond question.

Why They Were Called Baptists.

The following libel upon an excellent denomination is so good that even the sternest elder will have to join the laugh:

A Baptist minister fishing near Cape Cod catches a strange fish, and asks of the skipper, "What manner of fish is this, my good man? It has a curious appearance."

"Yass! Only been round here this year."

"What do you call it?"

"We call 'em Baptists."

"Why so?"

"'Cause they spile so quick arter they come out of the water."

In the Poultry Yard

T. F. Orr, in the National Stockman, reminds poultry dealers to be sure and have crushed bone or oyster shell within reach of fowls, both old and young. The former need it to keep up the supply of animal vigor caused by the extry work of egg production, and the latter need it to supply strength and vigor to the growing frame. The production of feathers on either old or young birds will be materially assisted by a liberal supply of bone and shell.

A man is not bound with the chains of habit at once, but the Lilliputian threads are slowly wound about and wound about, and because they are so slight they are disdained. The sober man becomes a drunkard not all at once. He plays with the tiger's cub at first. It is small and playful, but its fascination binds him as it grows, until at last the beast is his master.—Dr. Edward P. Ingersoll.

Money Tells the Tale!

I AGAIN call your attention to the fact that I have filled my shelves with a line of goods now most likely to be called for. These goods were bought in New York and Baltimore for "spot cash," and I expect to sell them for less than any man who does a credit business. And now, my friends, although I can't afford to blow with printer's ink, I have put my prices

DOWN! DOWN! DOWN!

Come and see for yourself. It will pay you to pay the cash for your goods and avoid the extra charges always incident to the credit business.

Again, only my own force is employed—another saving to my customers. I intend to run my business hereafter on a

Close Cash Basis,

and intend that you shall hear from me "before the races are over.' Mark it!

Another word to my country patrons: I will, at a small discount,

PAY CASH FOR TRADE

if you do not wish my goods.

I promise to be, as I have been before, a benefit to you.

Yours with much respect,

THOMAS M. COOPER.
