NO FRIM-FRAM SAUCE?

Fish and Pork Chops Lead in 'Ave.' Eateries

With Northwest Baltimoreans who eat in Pennsylvania Avenue restaurants, it's fish and pork chops two to one. Of the 15 establishments visited in a recent AFRO survey, 12 reported these foods among the three most frequently ordered.

Hamburger steak held third place on most of the reports.

Waitresses a the Uneeda Cafe, 1604 Pennsylvania Ave., placed fish as the most popular dish, with lima beans second. As they talked, two customers strode in and verified the girls' statements by ordering a serving of the popular beans.

Affected by Economic Conditions

Reasons advanced by the restaurateurs for the above-mentioned choice were economic rather than a matter of taste preference. Some were frank in stating, that foods most in demand were those nearest the bottom of the price list.

Prices vary greatly in Northwestern eateries. Chicken dinners, for example, range from 75 cents to $1.50. Steaks begin at 85 cents and go to $1.60. This is due largely to the class of the restaurant. Places catering to the same type of trade maintain similar prices.

Tipping on Decline

Tipping, the old American custom that reached an all-time high during the war, is now on decline, waitresses report. The customer, who formerly gave a quarter tip, is now down to a dime, they say.

It seems to be a custom now to offset the rising cost of food by reducing tips.

The demand for barbecue ribs and liver is strong in many establishments, the survey showed.

Public Donations Sought by Md. School for Blind

The Maryland School for the Blind, maintaining for the 92rd year an unbiased policy of educating the sightless and deaf of the State, is currently appealing for donations toward the cost of building repairs, new equipment, and increasing costs of food.

Not a State school, as is believed by many people, this institution was founded in 1853 by a group of Baltimoreans interested in the welfare of the blind.

They were Benjamin F. Newcomer, John Glenn, Jacob I. Cohen Jr., William G. Baker, J. Smith Hollins and Dr. John N. Mcjilton. These men believed that such handicapped children should be educated in their own State and not sent to Pennsylvania.

Money Donated by Public

These original incorporators obtained generous sums of money from public-spirited citizens and, with an additional amount of $5,000 from the State, were able to establish the Maryland School for the Blind.

Although the State each year has given some financial assistance, the school has had to depend also on donations from other sources. This, however, has not been sufficient to make repairs necessary to the building or purchase new equipment.

Repairs and painting of buildings will cost approximately $15,000, and the cost of bread and milk will be $1000 more than last year.

Maintains Good Record

The school has maintained during its 93 years an excellent record. Many of the former students and graduates have been successful lawyers, dictaphone operators, piano tuners, teachers, musicians, stand operators.

Mr. Butler Mr. Sutton

Among them are Alphonso Butler, now an employee of the Maryland Workshop for the Blind; John McGraw and Clearnon Sutton. Graduating in the June class at Douglass High School, Sutton is now enrolled at Howard University.

Deaf pupils are given practical training. Many learn shoe repairing, others house painting. Both the blind and the deaf are given an opportunity to learn certain phases of laundry work.

Persons interested in making contributions should make checks payable to the Maryland School for the Blind, and mail to Harryman J. Bosley, treasurer, Overlea, 6, Md.

All Quiet at Northwestern as Deaf Mutes 'Tell' of Theft

Magistrate Walter Dewees and spectators in Northwestern police court were given an impromptu lesson in the sign language, Monday, as two deaf mutes were held under $1000 bail for the theft of an auto.

They were James Hill, 25, of 38 Hanover Pl., Washington, and Robert Taylor, 19, of 622 Baker St. Hill pleaded not guilty, while the other admitted the charge.

Policeman Interpreter

In a sense the two were both prosecuted and represented by the police. A detective outlined the charge, explaining that the auto, the property of Earl Ellis, of 1000 N. Arlington Ave., had been taken from McMechen St. and Pennsylvania Ave., late Saturday.

The second officer to play a role in the case was Patrolman Joseph Sandebeck of Central District, who acted as interpreter for the accused pair.

It was with deep interest that spectators watched the hearing, especially the officer as he conversed understandingly with the two mutes and the latter as they relayed their story to the magistrate through the patrolman.

Hill's story was that he had merely entered the auto to take a ride with his friend whom he had known since early childhood.

Taylor, however, said he had taken the car and made no further explanation.

Local, D.C. Attorneys Confer on Golf Course Legal Action

Local and Washington attorneys held a conference on Monday to discuss the aspects of a possible court fight to obtain adequate and equal facilities for Baltimore golfers.

The lawyers were W. A. C. Hughes Jr., and Joseph Waddy, representing Charles A. Houston, acting with the approval of the executive board of the NAACP. The matter was brought to the attention of the association by members of the Monumental Golf Club.

Three White Courses

Golfers contend that as taxpayers, they are entitled to facilities equal to those provided for whites.

The latter group has three, modernly equipped 18-hole courses, Mt. Pleasant, Clifton Park and Hillendale. One of these, Mt. Pleasant, was built at an approximate cost of $250,000.

Carroll, Appeasement Course

Carroll Park, the jim-crow golf course, was built in 1937 to appease colored sportsmen when they demanded access to the white municipal courses.

Only two of its nine holes have hazards designed to improve a golfer's game and, according to local followers of the game, playing the Carroll course is a definite handicap when preparing for competition on the better courses in other cities.

War-Time Privileges

During the war years when materials needed for improving Carroll Park were unavailable, golfers were permitted to use Mt. Pleasant. This past spring, however, the segregated policy was adopted again and golfers were denied use of the white course.

Instead of being told they could not use Mt. Pleasant, golfers were denied tickets to tee off.
