Japan Would Join Hitler To Rule The World

There can be no question of Japan's intention to absolutely dominate all of Asia and the East Pacific, and to completely drive the white races from that vast, rich, little-developed area. For many years, Japanese foreign and military policy has been based squarely on the principle of "Asia for the Asiatics," and her statesmen and warlords publicly affirm that doctrine at every opportunity.

In addition, many an authority is convinced that, incredible as it may seem, Japan also intends to dominate and rule the world.

Basis for that belief is found in the famous-or infamous—"Tanaka Memorial." This astonishing document, so the story goes, was conceived and prepared by Baron Giichi Tanaka and handed by him to Emperor Hirohito in July, 1927. The Emperor, the story continue gave it his seal of approval and ever since it has been the official guide for Japanese diplomatic, naval and military strategy.

A copy of this Memorial, according to the accepted story, was stolen by an agent of Felix Dzershinsky, who used to be the Chief of the Russian Cheka and was considered one of the ablest spies in the world. When the text of the Memorial was made public, the Japanese government promptly branded it aforgery. But Leon Trotsky, who was Soviet War Commissar at the time of the incident, insisted that it was absolutely genuine, and accurately represented Japans program for world conquest.

The Memorial runs to some 10,000 words. It states that Japan must first conquer Manchuria, Inner Mongolia and other provinces—ends which Nippon has already achieved in whole or in part. It states further that this must be followed by seizure and conquest of the Philippines, Thailand, Malaya, Singapore, the South Sea Islands, and Australia. Everyone who has followed the news since that fateful December 7 of last year, knows what Japan doing in that direction.

These Japanese victories, it continues, will permit the subjugation of India, and once that is accomplished, the way will be paved for invasion of Asia Minor and Europe. And, says the Memorial flatly, to achieve these goals, it will be necessary to crush the United States, and defeat Great Britain, Russia and other Pacific and Asiatic powers.

Additional evidence of Japan's intentions is found in a speech made sometime ago by an Admiral who is now in command of Nipponese naval forces. He said that his ambition was to invade, conquer and occupy the Pacific Coast, to drive the defending forces back toward the Middle West, and so eventually dictate the terms of peace to a helpless President of the White House at Washington.

The Japanese have obviously placed great faith in their enemies' indolence, blindness and pacific ways of thinking. That faith has already paid them great dividends. They have built up a highly efficient fifth column organization, which played a major part in the Malaya and Singapore disaster. Experts believe that a long-established organization of that kind exists in this country, and that unless it is destroyed we may suffer a disaster even greater than Pearl Harbor, somewhere within our continental boundaries—probably on the Pacific Coast, with its great plane factories, water power plants, etc.

ALL MUST HELP

Workable price control is not simply a matter of passing a law. It is an immensely complicated and difficult undertaking. And it imposes responsibilities upon individuals no less than upon industry and government.

The recently passed price control bill, in the judgment of experts, will be of service in holding down prices, but it won't do the whole job by a long shot. It has grave weaknesses and loopholes. The consumer cannot rely entirely on it for protection.

The real industry of this country is playing a very important role in price control. Both chain and independent merchants, by the thousands, long ago realized the danger of inflation. They at once adjusted their operating practices. By wise buying, by stringent economy,by moderate mark-ups, and by informative advertising, they are helping to guard the public's pocketbook. The fact that prices for necessities have so far not gone up excessively is largely a matter of their doing.

The consumer must help. One of the surest ways to produce inflation is scarce buying and hoarding. Stocks are swiftly depleted, consumers clamor for more, and the normal processes of trade are thrown out of gear. The retail industry is begging the public to buy normally—and the public, to save its own bacon, should follow that adivce. Don't listen to wild rumors—no one will starve in this country, or have to do without basic necessities.

The fight against inflation which is being waged by retailers and other groups is in the personal interest of all. And it must have the understanding and support of all.

Let A Real Dirt Farmer Tell the Story

The hundred-year sleep of the daily press on the farming situation shows of disturbance. Their article by reporters, who get their information form the Department of Agriculture and not from real dirt farmers, scratch the surface. But he won't get down to the real potatoes until he consults a farmer who makes all his living from the soil.

Stop taking the farm labor for army, navy and the Government charities, such as the CCC, WPA, public relations hangers-on, etc. Abolish all these charities and put the men in the armed forces. Take all men of military age from Government desk jobs and put them to fighting. Women can take their places well.

Abolish the AAA; farmers do not want charity, they want fair prices. If labor is up twenty per cent or more, then let farm products go up so much. If there is a minimum price for labor, then farmers are entitled to a minimum price.

PAYING FOR WAR

The vast government deficits built up during the depression were largely met by selling government securities to the banks. They were paid for, of course, with the savings of the people.

A government bond is the safest of all investments. The whole wealth of the country stands behind it. But—and every citizen should realize this—we cannot meet the vast deficits which will be built up during this war by simply selling bond to the banks in limitless quantitie.

If sales of government bonds to banks were continued on the depression scale, private banking would in time virtually disappear. The banks, to all intents and purposes, would become a branch of the government. And that in itself would be a long step toward the destruction of the individual freedom we are fighting for.

This war must be paid for by all the people. They must pay for it in higher taxes. They must pay for it by buying, individually, Defense Bonds and other government obligations. They may have to pay for it with forced savings. The ability of the banks to absorb the load is not limitless.

FICTION

Does anyone now remember that about ten years or more ago Hector Bywater, the well-known naval journalist, published a scarce novel in which he described the events of a future naval war between Japan and the United States of America? I have forgotten its name and I cannot find my copy, but I remember enough of the tale to realize that Bywater foretold very accurately what is now happening.

He gave all the early victories to the Japanese. He let them take Guam and the Philippines. He showed the United States Navy faring very badly indeed in just such a treacherous attack before a declaration of war as has taken place.

He also forecast the passion of fanaticism which would make the Japanese count their lives as less than thistledown if only they could injure their enemy. This he illustrated by giving to the Japanese a tremendous score, which history, thank goodness, has not repeated. They completely blocked the Panama Canal.

Only after many months of unrelieved disaster was the United States allowed by Bywater to pull itself together, but once that had happened the complete defeat of Japan was not long in coming.

Use Prisoners to Help Win the War

In a moment pressing for action in every department of life, when all man power is required for war, why it it, that our prisoners are teeming with idle men?

We not only would save millions of dollars in expense, but this labor is needed now in war industries.

By induction of these idle men into the armed service, we might clear the prisons of the United States for the duration of the war. Here they can fight for the country and be given a real opportunity to reform. In evidencing their manhood now, let freedom after the war be their reward.If they fail, or prove false, then by military rule, they should be flogged or shot.

At most, many of these unfortunates are prisoners, by reason of environment or circumstances of life. We, too, might all be prisoners, if Hitler wins the war.
