No Nails or Wire in Larro

Thousands of cows die every year from swallowing nails, slugs, staples, tag fasteners and baling wire with their feed.

These dangerous scraps of iron and steel rupture the walls of the stomach and work their way into the animal's heart.

LARRO is the only dairy feed that is absolutely free from this death dealing junk. It is the only dairy feed which, in its finished state, passes over a powerful electro-magnet. Not a piece of iron or steel can remain in LARRO.

IMPORTANT SCHOOL TESTS

Benefits To Be Derived By Kent Schools From Standardized Tests

It is a generally accepted principle, that in any field of human endeaver the best results are obtained when one has a definite aim to work for and instruments for determining from time to time how much hes been accomplished. A definite aim makes it possible for the worker to direct his efforts toward the particular things to be accomplished, instead of scattering them over an indefinite field. Instruments for measuring results make it possible for the worker to know what he has accomplished and where he needs to place greater effort and where less effort. It is also possible for him to learn whether the materials and methods he is using are effective and which materials and methods are most effective.

This principle is the foundation of success in the business world. The merchant, manufacturer, or farmer who does not have a definite aim and who does not measure his accomplishment from time to time is most frequently a failure. Bankers measure the results of their business every day. Merchants take inventories once a year and in many cases more frequently, sometimes a partial inventory every day. They consider this procedure necessary for success.

The teacher is a manufacturer. His raw material is the child's mind. Textbooks, school buildings, equipment, libraries, and methods and devices of teachings are the instruments which he uses to change this raw material into the finished product or educated boys and girls who are prepared to do their part in the life of the community. Without definite aims the teacher cannot plan his work effectively. He does not know, except in an indefinite or general way, what he is to do. If he has definite aims, but no instruments for measuring his results accurately, he cannot learn when he has attained his aims. Thus he is compelled to work in the dark.

With a full realization of the truth of the principle stated above, and looking forward to the betterment of education for the boys and girls in Kent County, Maryland, Miss Mina M. Langvick, Supervisor of Schools, made a survey of the elementary schools in the county through the use of Standardized Tests. Mrs. May Mills Beck, Attendance Officer, assisted in giving the tests which covered only the two fundamental subjects of reading and arithmetic.

With the results of these tests before them, the teachers are enabled to know their pupils better. The scores attained show whether the pupils are up to the standard, the score of the middle child of all of the hundreds of thousands of children throughout the country to whom the tests were given during the course of their preparation. They show whether the pupils are up to the standard in ability to comprehend or readily understand the thought embodied in what is read and to read rapidly; whether they are up to the standard in rate of work and in accuracy for each of the four operations in arithmetic. With this information at hand, the teachers know where they should place the emphasis in their instruction. Furthermore, the children, with their scores before them, can, with the mere guidance of the teachers and suggestions as to methods of procedure be encouraged to improve their own record.

The scores of the schools throughout the county were lower in reading than in arithmetic. Not for this reason alone, however, will the greater attention be given to reading. Reading is the means by which the world does a large part of its work. The printed page is used for hours deaily by millions of people seeking either information or pleasure in reading. The student must read his lesson; it is essential that the banker have some knowledge of the daily industrial reports; the farmer finds it profitable to read the government bulletins on the various crops; the entire family has an interest in the ability of the cook to use the cook book intelligently; people in all walks of life read the daily newspaper, and he who cannot readily comprehend what he reads suffers a serious handicap.

When all of the tests had been given, group meetings were held by the Supervisor in four of the graded schools throughout the county. At these meetings, the teachers were afforded the best possible opportunity to know the individual abilities of their children by scoring their papers.

The results were tabulated and graphed for presentation to the teachers at the meeting of the Principals and Teachers of the Elementary Schools on Friday, November 3rd. On this occasion, Miss I. Jewell Simpson, Assistant Director of the Bureau of Educational Measurements, State Department of Education was present. She presented in a most interesting and instructive manner the purposes of standard tests and remedial measures for the instruction of those children who are below standard in their work.

For the purpose of illustrating the best method of teaching silent reading and to assist Miss Simpson in her presentation of remedial means to be used for children who are backward in that subject, an excellent demonstration lesson was given by Miss Hannah W. Bell, a teacher in the Chestertown Elementary School.

A most unique and helpful message addressed "To the Boys and Girls of Kent" by Miss Langvick was distributed among the teachers. The purpose of the message is to help the child to compare his rating with the standard score and to arouse in him a strong desire to beat his own record until he has reached the standard. Included in the message are ways and means by which the child can keep his own record and drill himself in the work most needed.

At the close of the program, the meeting was turned over to the teachers to consider the advisibility of joining the Maryland State Teachers' Association. The benefits to be derived from membership in the State Association were presented by Mr. Owen C. Blades, President of the Kent County Teachers' Association and the question was acted upon favorably.

A very delightful feature of the meeting was a luncheon served to teachers by the Parent-Teachers Association of the Chestertown Elementary School. The idea is most commendable and far reaching in its effect on the professional spirit of the teachers. Their gratitude and appreciation is hereby extended to the association.
