Children and Careers

Children are not a handicap but an urge—that is, if a woman has a fair share of the matrimonial instinct, which I think most women have. Out of my own experience I can sincerely say that to my daughters I owe whatever of success I have made. Indeed they kept me from being a complete failure. And this has been so from the first day I stepped out from a sheltered home to earn my own living and theirs as well.—Genevieve Pankhurst, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

Outdoor Storage Cellars Favored

Superior to Rooms in Basements of Dwellings for Vegetables.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Outdoor cellars may be used to advantage for the storage of surplus vegetable crops that otherwise might be lost, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. Such cellars are on the whole superior to storage rooms in basements of dwellings. Vegetables can more conveniently be placed in such cellars than in basement storage rooms. By opening the door during the night and closing it in the morning before the air becomes warm, it is possible to keep the cellar cool and quickly reduce the temperature of the stored products to the desired point for safe storage. All ventilators should likewise be kept tightly closed until the outside air is again cooler than that within the cellar, unless the outside temperature is low enough to be dangerous.

Best Location.

If the outdoor storage cellar is to be used principally for storing crops such as turnips, beets, and carrots for feeding livestock, it should be located near the stable. When it is designed for keeping vegetables for the table, the storage cellar should be accessible from the kitchen at all times. If both fruit and vegetables are to be stored, there should be two compartments to the cellar, with a ventilating apparatus in each.

The type of the outdoor storage cellar varies with geographical location. Except in sections where the climate is very mild, the storage cellar should be constructed so that it can be kept free from undue moisture and frost. In northern sections outdoor storage cellars are made almost entirely below ground and covered with a foot or two of earth. In winter the dirt covering may be supplemented by a layer of manure, straw, corn fodder or similar material.

A storage house adapted to conditions in southern sections of the United States may be constructed on a well-drained site by setting a row of posts five or six feet apart, extending seven or eight feet above the surface of the ground, with a ridgepole placed on top of them. Against each side of the ridgepole a row of planks or puncheons is placed, with their opposite ends resting in a shallow trench four or five feet from the line of posts. The ends are boarded up, a door being provided in one end of the structure, and the roof covered with sod to a depth of five or six inches. The floors of outdoor storage houses are usually dirt.

Storage House in North.

An above-ground type of storage house used in many sections of the North is a frame structure with walls ten to twelve inches thick filled with insulating material, such as sawdust or shavings. Both inside and outside walls are sheathed with matched lumber so as to make them air tight. The rafters are ceiled on the underside with the same material and the space between them filled with dry insulating substance. The use of building paper in the roof and walls of the storage house is of great value in insulating the structure. An air duct or pipe of sufficient size should be used to bring air from the outside. This duct should be placed just beneath the level of the floor, running from a point just outside the building to an inlet in the floor. The outside end of the duct should be covered with woven wire to prevent the entrance of small animals. A ventilating flue in the roof is necessary for the escape of warm air. Both ventilator and air inlet should be closed during very cold weather. If the storage room is longer than 12 feet, an additional ventilator will be needed. Unless the vegetables are placed in receptacles and set on shelves on the walls of the storage house, a slat floor on which to put the stored products should be used to provide a better circulation of air.

Hogging Off Corn Saves Farmer Time and Labor

Farmers who hogged off a portion of their corn crop and husked the remainder on the stalk, made more money on corn in the past five years than those who cut, shocked, and husked it all, according to the experiences on Ohio farms where records were kept.

The figures for this survey were recorded by the farmers themselves, and F. L. Morison, of Ohio State University, who compiled the figures, says that by proper planning these men who let the hogs do part of the work greatly reduced labor costs.

"Based on the figures secured in Greene county from 1920 to 1925," writes Mr. Morison, "a farmer who has 40 acres of corn will spend 143 days of man labor in raising and harvesting his corn crop if he cuts, shocks and husks it. If five acres are 'hogged off' the 40-acre corn crop will take 131 days of man labor. Hogging off not only saves labor in harvesting the corn, but also saves time in caring for the hogs.

"If this farmer with 40 acres of corn hogs off 30 acres and husks the remainder off the stalk, it will require only 78 days of man labor to raise and harvest his corn crop, or 65 days less than if he were to cut, shock and husk it all. At the high wages paid for this extra harvesting labor, the saving in man labor would amount to more than twice the value of the stover left standing in the field."

Green Feed Helps Hens

During the late fall and early spring the addition of green food to the rations of the hens will well repay the efforts of the poultry keeper. This can be supplied in many ways. Green cut alfalfa, corn fodder, lawn clippings or clover are excellent green foods. If these are not available, such as mangels or turnips, are very acceptable. Many good poultry keepers feed both. This, of course, is in addition to the regular grain rations. By using a little thought during the growing season enough of this material can be cured for winter consumption.

Culling Is Profitable

That it does not pay to keep poultry—has been demonstrated to at least one West Virginia poultry raiser and his neighbors. Last fall he followed the advice of the poultry extension specialists and culled his flock. From a flock of 81 hens he culled out 39 and sent them to the market. To his surprise, the remaining 42 birds produced as many eggs as the original flock and his feed bill, consequently, was nearly halved.

AIRY ATTIC ROOM CONVENIENT TO CURE SEED FOR SPRING

Plan of Stringing Ears Is Familiar to Many.

With the recent frost catching much of the corn full of moisture, the method of curing seed corn this fall will determine to a large extent the success or failure of the stand next year.

"Seed corn," declares A. N. Hume, of South Dakota State college, "should be stored in a dry place with good air circulation, neither too hot nor too cold. An airy attic room will serve to store enough for home use, although it has the objection that it may bring mice into the house. The seed ears may be covered with dry threshed oats in a bin and allowed to remain there until spring.

"Most corn growers are familiar with the plan of stringing the ears and hanging them outdoors on the sunny side of a building or tying two or more ears together by the husks and hanging them that way. Such methods of curing are usually successful, unless the sunshine becomes too hot and causes germination of the corn. The strings of seed ears may be suspended from the rafters of a crib or even a garage, but do not drain the radiator of the car or allow steam to escape below the corn in freezing weather. Many bushels of good seed corn have been ruined in this manner.

"If corn is once well cured, it will be almost certain to retain its germination. Sometime after Christmas when it is thoroughly cured, it may be shelled, graded, and stored in sacks ready for planting."

Mature ears make the best seed corn although corn that has reached the glazed stage can be used if properly cured and stored. Seed for next year should be secured this fall.

Extra Feeding Assists Young Growing Animals

It is always advisable to feed young lambs or any kind of young stock—pigs, calves or chickens—extra. If you would build a lamb run, that is, make a pen large enough to accommodate the lambs so that they could get in and out and sheep could not, you could feed the lambs extra in this run. Feed them ground oats and corn meal, and ensilage also; in fact, anything they care to eat. It might be well to let them eat ensilage with old sheep, also hay, but grain should be fed alone so the old sheep could not get to it. It is possible by this extra feeding and care to make a big growth on lambs. A farmer could get them to market much earlier. Extra feeding put into young growing animals is never wasted if fed with care.

Nurse Crop for Clover

Tests at the Brandon experimental farm emphasize the fact that sweet clover is much more economically produced when sown with a nurse crop than when sown alone. The yields of the various nurse crops are in no way due to the presence of the sweet clover and the slightly increased yield the following season in favor of seeding alone is insignificant. The stubble also affords considerable protection and hence winter-killing is less likely to occur.

FARM NOTES

Some cows live on profits.

* * *

Deep cultivation of cabbage cuts too many roots.

* * *

Noxious weeds, like diseases, should be eradicated.

* * *

Once planted, cover crops take care of themselves—as well as of the soil.

* * *

The farmer who has his success anchored by the long roots of sweet clover and alfalfa is truly anchored to the rock of ages—limestone.

* * *

The pullets, by being housed in the new quarters, will become accustomed to the new environment before they begin to lay, and so will not be "thrown" off.

* * *

Plowing requires more power than any other farm operation. Special care should be taken to have the proper hitches so as to reduce the draft to a minimum.

* * *

Seed should be selected from a field of corn adapted to the locality. If a farmer has no such field on his own farm he may get permission to select from a neighbor's field.

* * *

An egg is only a dividend declared after the body needs have been supplied, and nature looks out for Number One first—to get lots of eggs, cull out the drones and feed to the limit those that deserve it.

* * *

Clover for the second cutting is generally regarded as the best for several years. All in all this must be regarded as a favorable season.

* * *

Rye is a good winter cover crop, as it will make a fair growth even on thin land, and adds humus, but no nitrogen to the soil.

* * *

One of the factors that limits the successful growing of alfalfa is the matter of drainage. Alfalfa simply must have a dry footing if it is going to grow

Pup Couldn't Digest Big Feast of Nails

Hop, Skip and Jump, each a four-months-old police dog, found a bag of nails while they were playing under the counter of Max Goldman's trunk store, 95 West Houston street. They swallowed the nails, and when they began indicating that they did not feel well, Goldman took them to a hospital for animals.

There Dr. Alfred W. Meyer operated on Skip, removing a pound of nails from his stomach, but Skip died. The surgeons then operated on Hop, and in his interior found 558 wire nails, each an inch long; one three-inch nail, two long pieces of bent wire and a stone as large as a plum. Hop recovered from the operation and probably will get well. Doctor Meyer explored Jump, X-ray pictures having shown the presence of nails.—New York Herald-Tribune.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

NANNY AND BILLY

"Hello, Nanny," said Billy.

"Hello, Billy," said Nanny.

The two goats looked at each other, blinked their eyes and then began a good-natured little fight, trying to push each other out of the way.

"I'm getting ready ahead of time," said Billy.

"I'll have you out of the way when the keeper comes along with the food."

"I'll do the same," said Nanny.

"Now there, there, don't be a silly goat. You know very well that if I am doing it you can't be doing it too.

"Besides you know by this time that I can get you out of the way when I want to eat.

"I will let you eat after I'm through.

"That is enough of an honor to show you, Miss Nanny."

"Indeed," said Nanny.

"Yes, indeed," repeated Billy.

But Nanny didn't say anything more this time for she knew Billy was right. And besides Billy was a nice goat.

Even if he did shove her out of the way when she wanted to get her food at the same time as he did she really always had enough to eat. Billy didn't keep on eating forever, and besides the keeper looked after both of them.

"I have bigger and stronger horns than you have," said Billy, after a moment. "My whiskers are heavier and more handsome. I'm bigger, too. I'm all the things a Mr. Goat should be."

"Well, as far as that is concerned," said Nanny, "I am all the things a Mrs. Goat should be. I shouldn't have horns as big as yours. My whiskers should be lighter. Besides, Billy, you're entirely too proud of those whiskers. It's not every creature who cares for them.

"Big men often don't have them. In fact the keeper hasn't any whiskers, and I suppose he could have them if he wished. They're a matter of taste and choice. And, too, no lady cares about having whiskers at all. Just to keep you company I have a few, as all the Mrs. Goats have.

"It's not because we're so fond of whiskers. We're not—and so we don't have heavy ones. But we do like to be nice to our Billy Goats and so we keep them company by having a few. That's our reason if you would know the truth, sir."

"From Asia did we come," said Mr. Angora Goat, in the next yard.

"Mr. Angora," said Mrs. Angora, "you shouldn't speak in such a way. You should say instead:

"'We came from Asia.'"

"Not a bit of it, my love," said Mr. Angora Goat, shaking his head.

"The more queerly we speak the cleverer will we be thought. If we say things so no one will understand them they will think they are stupid not to understand—even though there may be nothing to understand.

Mr. Angora Goat.

"And by 'they' I mean any creatures who may happen to be listening."

"Be a nice, simple angora goat, and don't have such silly ideas," said Mrs. Angora, "for you're really a nice goat.

"All angoras are good to their young—the precious children who come in the springtime—and all angoras have good appetites as all goats should have. Nothing makes them sick or disagrees with their tummies.

"That's the way to be, I say," ended Mrs. Angora.

"You're right, my dear, you're right."

"Ah, here comes my friend, Jimmie, the boss of the Angoras," ended Mr. Angora Goat.

Jimmie came along and two Miss Angoras with him.

His horns were stronger than theirs and he made them go the way he wanted them too—still he was not cross, nor was he mean.

He was the way with them that Billy was with Nanny—just the same way.

HOW TWO WOMEN AVOIDED OPERATIONS

The Following Letters of Mrs. Thurston and Mrs. Beard Carry an Encouraging Message to Other Sick Women

MRS. ETHEL THURSTON 324 N. PINE STREET, LIMA, OHIO

Lima, Ohio.—"I want to tell you how your medicine has helped me. For weeks I suffered with awful pains from inflammation and I was in such misery that I had to bend double to get relief. I could not be touched or jarred, had awful pain all over my abdomen and could not touch my feet to the floor. It was impossible for me to straighten up and the pains never ceased. I took treatments for some time and finally was told I would have to have an operation. I do not believe in operations, and I had read so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I told my husband I would try it before I gave up. I soon began to feel that it was doing me good. The awful misery began to leave me, also the backache. I have a good appetite and am gaining in weight. Taking the medicine was the best thing I ever did. I feel like it has saved my life and I do not hesitate to say so to my friends. At least it saved me from a dreaded operation and I am still taking it. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about the medicine."—Mrs. ETHEL THURSTON, 324 North Pine Street, Lima, Ohio.

Mrs. Beard's Letter

Eddy, Texas.—"I will write you a few words, thinking it will do some one else good. Two doctors said I would have to be operated on because for nearly twelve months I suffered from a weakness from which I could get no relief. I was restless and nervous and was not able to walk across the house. They said it was the Change of Life. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the newspapers, and as I could not get any help from doctors I thought I would give that a trial. I began with the liquid and it helped me some, then you advised me to take the tablet form and I began to improve rapidly. I have gained in weight from 105 to 170 pounds. I recommend it to all women with this trouble."—Mrs. M. E. BEARD, R. No. 1, Box 143, Eddy, Texas.
