From Washington on October the fifteenth comes news that the first load of mail direct from Argentina is on its way to the United States, and with its arrival will open the world's longestcontinous air mail route also that this cuts off two weeks of the trip from Argentina to New York.

This event marks the culmination of negotiations begun when Presi- Hoover, while President-elect, made his goodwill to the South American countries.

The American people have their fads andfancies, they go from one thing to the next, one sport of occupation is fashionable this year and they take up something else. But this is not the case with foot-ball, which has become a kind of passion. Nothing can stir them any more than the sight of their favorite foot ball elevens, rooting the pigskin through the mud and dust,

And when that same,bit ofleath er is pushed over the line of a touchdown or kicked through those difficult goal post it seems as if the crowd would yell itself hoarse. The supported of the winners are raised to the pitch of happiness while the gloom and depression of the losers takes on the deepest dye.

It is pleasing to observe this enthusiasm occuring over a thing in which the mercenary motive is lacking. We are accused of being a nation of dollar chasers. But the football crowd yelling out on that field indicates that dollars are not the only things we think about

The winners of that game are no richer than they were the day before. Some of them may have bet money on the issue, but that is a kind of incident, something that did not so much to make money, as to emphasize their confidence in their own judgement of the teams.

The thing that arouse that intense interest is the spectacle of skill, of achievement, of dexterity of physical courage, of quick thinking. We all admire these qualities When a team wine at a football against worthy opponents,we know the winners had those qualities. Probably the losers did too only not quite so much on that particular day. Admiring these qualities so much, we do the normal thing when we take off our hats and lift up our voices.

Secretary Mellon was asked a few days ago if he thought the opportunities for young men as good as they were in the past.

"As good?" replied the famous head of the treasury department. "They are 10 times better."

The idea has become somewhat common,that business has become such a complicated thing, that vast trade and productive organizations tend to make competition so difficult, that the youth who enters the commercial and industrial world does not have the chance he did in former years.

The modern business world is very alert to find talent of any kind. Any person man or woman, who shows initiative and enterprise and ability along any line is going to attract attention. Competition is so keen that the ability of that person is wanted and wanted very badly. Such a one is likely to get ahead in a brief time, time, and be far better rewarded than he could have beenyears ago

So many people are superficial and careless and indolent that a person who shows reasonably good qualities of initiative and intelligence finds doors opening to him.

In spite of all the difficulties in the way of the person who starts a small business, a multitude of people are constantly beginning enterprises in a small way succeeding in them, They see some opportunity, something that the people wanted that they were not getting, some improvement and the community welcomed it and paid a good price for it Mr. Mellon is quite right in his his feeling that the opportunities are 10 times better than they used to be. A person who uses his head who observes the habits of people and who becomes thoroughly familiar with some form of service that the people need, can find plenty of opportunity.

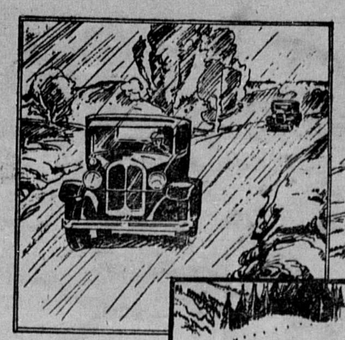
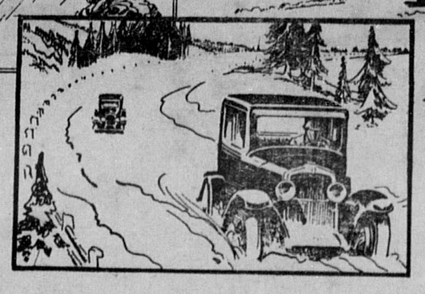
"What! A weather bureau?"



Testing a car's performance in heavy rain. From actual photograph.

The Weather Bureau at General Motors Proving Ground, at Milford, Mich.



Drawn from a photograph of a car being tested on snowy roads.

VISITORS to General Motors' 1268-acre Proving Ground marvel at the sight of a complete weather bureau and ask what it is for.

The answer is that in the testing of cars every possible factor that might affect a car's performance is considered by General Motors' engineers.

So precise are some of the tests that even the difference between a sunny day and a partly cloudy day—or between a north breeze and a south breeze—is considered.

With each day's record of the mechanical tests applied to a car on the roads and hills of the Proving Ground is included a report of the exact weather conditsons prevailing. The engineers then can know how weather affects performance, and can have a comparable record so that every car tested is given an equal opportunity to prove itself under exactly the same conditions.

Advance models of all the cars listed below were proved at the Proving Ground before they were introduced to the public. Read about them; then clip and send the coupon.
