At the moment all news has necessarily been obscured by the bank situation A brief resume seems to be in order at this time.

Holidays started with the closing of all Michigan banks by order of the governor, in order to prevent the collapse of Detroit's large banking institutions. Reverberations from this took the form of unusually heavy withdrawls in other states. A bank holiday was declared in Maryland, then in California, Oregon and Washington. Within a few days the holiday took in a heavy percentage of the states Restrictions varied in stringency. In most instances banks met payrolls, permitted withdrawal of small sums to meet current needs. In a few instances percentage withdrawals --usually 5 per cent of the total on deposit—were permitted.

The Presidental proclamation came as no surprise. Rumor was that it had been fourteen weeks ahead, and had been delayed until the new administration could take charge, in the belief that this would have a stabilizing effect on the public morale That seems to have been the case.

The federal proclamation was extremely stringent, providing that all banks should be closed during the holiday; that all transactions except those specifically ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury, should be suspended; that no bank could accept deposit loans, transfer credits abroad or deal in foreign exchange; that the Secretary of the Treasury might take control of the issuance of clearing house certificates during the holiday etc. Heavy penalties were provided—maximum of $10-000 fine and ten years in prison—for violation.

Talk of Federally backed scrip became widespread and at one time the Administration stated that some move in this direction would be made. Later, it was announced that no Federal scrip would be issued. B[illegible] to meet nee[illegible] a few m[illegible]

During the first week of the holiday, money in circulation rose to more than $6,700,000,000, the greatest expansion in history and a new high. Monetary gold stock of the country declined $116,000,000.

Excellent sign was the public attitude. It was, on the whole, serene and confident. The holidays were accepted casually—even humorously. There was no panic, no disturbance. Practically universal support of Administration policies was heard.

The belief is expressed on every hand that the holidays were the final vent in preparing the way for recovery. Sentiment is that the bottom has actually been reached, that the up-climb, slow as it will be, is at least in sight.

Interesting and important phase of the situation is the Administration's drive against gold hoarding. The amount of gold thus held is unknown, but those in a position to estimate believe it to reach almost unbelievable heights. Various means for eliminating this condition are suggested One would be publicity which would, in effect, characterize gold hoarders as "public enemies." Another is a stiff tax on harded gold It is possible that a law making the hoarding of gold a crime may eventually be passed. This has been done in crucial times in other counties. Universal public support of this drive may also be expected.

All in the logical conclusion to be drawn is that the holidays were necessary, were definitely in the interest of depositors, the public and honest banking, that the situation has been properly and aggressively handled by those [illegible] that the work done [illegible] the national

Three Good Reasons

CANNED pineapple is being proclaimed in the press as being good for you in many different ways. Eminent scientists made the investigations upon which these claims are based and there can be no doubt of the truth of their conclusions. But there are three good reasons, in addition to these, for eating canned pineapple. The first is that it tastes good. The second is that it smells good. And the third is that it looks good. Are these a fine combination in a food that is good for you?

Try These Recipes

Pineapple Pie with Topping. Press the syrup from the contents of a No. 2 can of crushed Hawaiian pineapple and one-half cup sugar, two tablespoons lemon juice, two tablespoons orange juice and one-half teaspoon salt, and bring to boiling. Add three tablespoons minute tapioca, and cook in a double boiler fifteen minutes, or until transparent. Cool, add the crushed pineapple, and pour into a pie tin lined with pastry. Pour [illegible] cream. Chop blanched citron over top or with [illegible] of pastry, and bake [illegible] or about [illegible] This makes one large pie.

Tropical Fruit. Drain [illegible] two small cans of pineapple [illegible] No. 2½ size can each [illegible] Place [illegible] pineapple [illegible] juice [illegible] cover [illegible] chilled [illegible] on each [illegible] of the [illegible] serve [illegible]

APRIL FOOL FUN

APRIL FOOL'S DAY is a most accommodating date, for it gives foolish people an opportunity to be as foolish as they like. A party's the thing, and be sure to forget the addresses of all the sensible people you know, because they wouldn't care to come anyway.

Send along a gay little paper crown in a red envelope to arrange on your guests and write on the balloon:

Now is the time for all good fools
To put their masks upon the shelf
Dress in your raiment of cap and bells
Come, and be yourself.

Black and white dominoes are favorites with the men, while girls like to wear red and white as a rule. So give the men white balloons with a black and white picture of some comedian cut from a magazine; and give the girls red balloons with a photograph of a partner for one of the pictures on the men's balloons. For example such well-known costars as Wheeler and Woolsey, Burns and Allen, Ed Wynn and his "horse," two of the Marx brothers, etc. These may be supper partners or partners for the grand march which is done with hoops and sticks, and thus proves a very lively way to begin the dancing.

A foolish but very exciting game for kings and fools—and no foolin'. The recipes serve eight.
