The Company

The Continental Life Insurance Company was organized after the close of the insurance investigations in response to the demand for safe life insurance in a home company managed and controlled by home people—by men known throughout the peninsula for their integrity and sound business judgment.

The Directors

At least one director was selected from every county in Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland, whose very name should at once command the completest confidence in the proper administration of the company's affairs.

The Plan

In order to secure the interest and co-operation of as many as possible of the peninsula's leading citizens, it was determined to offer to each person who should insure in the company, an opportunity to purchase a limited amount of its stock, five years after the company commenced business, and at a price considerably below what it would probably be worth at that time.

The Result

The plan met with immediate success. Upon its presentation to the soundest business men in almost every community, they at once availed themselves of the opportunity to participate in the establishment on this peninsula, of a life insurance company which should stand forever as a lasting monument to the sagacity, thrift and public spirit of those, who, by their early patronage, made possible its establishment.

The Aid Test

Extravagance and graft go hand in hand. The investigations disclosed the greatest abuses in the companies with the highest expense rates. Good or bad management first shows itself in the expense account.

Our Record

The administration of the Continental has drawn from competent critics, such comments as these:

"I do not think it has been matched in the first year's experience of any other life insurance corporation."—Miles M. Dawson, Consulting Actuary, expert adviser of the Armstrong Investigating Committee.

"A good showing, especially for a new company."—Best's Life Insurance Reports.

"A remarkable record."—The Spectator (Insurance) New York.

"An extraordinarily creditable record—probably unprecedented—evidence of the skill, enterprise, rigid economy and integrity of the management."—The Chronicle (Insurance) New York.

Success

At the close of March, just eighteen months after the company opened its doors, it had on its books no less than two and a quarter millions of insurance, principally on the lives of citizens of this peninsula.

Security

The resources of the company now aggregate some $150,000, of which more than $100,000 is deposited with the State of Delaware for the protection of policyholders. Under the law, this deposit must be increased with the growth of the company's business, and in consequence thereof the Delaware Insurance Commissioner executes on each policy issued, the following certificate.

State of Delaware

Insurance Department

This Policy is registered and secured by a deposit of approved securities with this Department as provided by law.

CO-OPERATIVE GRANGE WORK.

An Interesting Paper Read by Col. Wm. J. Vannort at Millington.

The following very able paper on the co-operative system of buying and selling in the County Grange was delivered by Col. Wm. J. Vannort at the recent meeting of the Pomona Grange in Millington:

WORTHY MASTER AND BROTHER PATRONS:—It has pleased our worthy lecturer of Chestertown Grange to appoint me to inflict you with a paper on Co-operation in Grange Work and for the protection of our individual interests. Whilst the co-operative feature of the Grange is not its best nor dominant feature, it has much to recommend itself to the thorough and thoughtful attention of all patrons of husbandry. One who causes two blades of grass to grow where one blade hardly grew before is looked upon as a public benefactor, and justly so. He who saves dollars in advisedly and prudently using his cash in the purchase of the necessaries and luxuries of life, thereby enabling the purchasers and users of the commodities which go to make up the sum total of every article which is necessary to be used in the management of the domestic, agricultural or other pursuits, may be with equal justice recognized as an economic benefactor who represents the highest type of Americanism and protectiveness of co-operation. Co-operation is not an empty sound, as many of our patrons can testify. It is the bed-rock of the Granger's success. It means an honest combination of many persons of similar interests in which each work for the common good of all. The mere saving of a few dollars is a minor consideration of the Granger's plan of co-operation. It is merely a single cog in the combination of wheels which fits in and keeps the machinery in motion and brings results for which the patrons of husbandry have spent the best efforts of life to accomplish. The biggest thing we have as patrons to present to the world is our farms and their products. We are God's noblemen—the honest tillers of the soil who rack our brains and spend all our energies in devising ways and means to reap best results from our laborious toil—and we should have something to do with the fixing of prices of our products and in a measure control the value of the comodities we use. Our co-operative aim is to so thoroughly organize as to be in a position to demand a fair remunerative equivalent for our products, and be treated with some degree of consideration and courtesy by those who buy our products. Our intention is to calmly, briefly and dispassionately present to your strenuous consideration and prompt intelligent action the conditions which confront us as farmers, purchasers and users and consumers of the various articles of merchandise which enter into the actual domestic and business conditions of our every life. How we should buy them and how to sell what we produce. Who fixes the prices for what we have to sell, and also the prices we have to pay for what we must buy? Our hoped for accomplishment is to so present a bold front, a determined and thoroughly organization, and demand only a fair paying price for our products that we may possess a faint hope of lifting the heavy burden which so afflicts us, and be recognized as a potent factor in the game of buying and selling farm products and the necessary adjuncts to a successful and profitable husbandry. Pursue the same business policy, which afflicts the farmer and his wife, towards any business, profession or avocation, and I venture to assert that many of them would be behind the bars—the remainder inmates of the almshouse in a short time. Let your wife take a dozen eggs or chickens where she does her dealing, the merchant will soon inform her what he will pay for them, and will also tell her what she must pay for his wares and merchandise, upon which he places his prices and profits. Is that all fair? Again, ship your grain to Baltimore for sale and its ownership rests upon the consignee. who has sole control thereof, and when he gets his share of the proceeds, if there is anything left of the proceeds, the iniquitous inspection law and equally rascally despoiler, the railroad scaling act, comes in for their share—the balance, if any, may be paid over to the farmer. Baltimore need never expect to get the trade of the Eastern Shore until we are treated with more consideration, our rights respected and our grievous wrongs redressed. If we manage to eke out a miserable existence under the present regime, is it fair or just that we should forever submit to a system so palpably unjust and burden our children with conditions next to peonage?

The farmer is the only person who has not organized for mutual protection and preservation. It now behooves them to take prompt and energetic action looking forward to their emancipation from the thraldom of the middleman. The ignorant foreigner carrying the hod, cleaning on streets or catching cats, up to and include the miner, the railroad fireman and engineers have each their separate organizations to compel the greedy contractor and others to pay a living wage for services rendered. Why should the farmers not co-operate for mutual protection and by concerted and united action compel recognition from those who are our self constituted guardians. The Grange is the only organization for the benefit of the farmer that has stood the test of years, it's possibilities are great if conservatively and intelligently managed, and will result in an era of prosperity hitherto unknown in the annals of husbandry. Co-operation has inured to our patrons' advantage in a marked degree, hundreds of dollars have been saved to them, a better line of goods have been furnished them than heretofore, it is only in its incipiency with a perfect and thorough organization. A more perfect and extended scope of economics, the savings of the past will be a mere speck upon the horison of the future. Co-operation is the Granger's slogan, when once the middle men have the farmers divided and co-operation destroyed, then they can handle them to their heart's content. How will they accomplish it? By the use of the farmer himself. They count on his being short sighted, so lacking in a sense of his own dignity, so unwilling to unite in a co-operative manner for his own protection that they can depend upon him to destroy his own citadel, divide and conquer is their motto. Their estimate of some farmers is entirely correct, they can handle such more easily and make them serve their purpose. I am proud to say the number of such men is very small yet it behooves us to concentrate our every energy to the accomplishment of the high ideals of Grange co-operation. In securing the advantages of co-operative farming we get the following results.

Frst—It insures every cent of profit to the farmer.

Second—It encourages better quality of the output.

Third—It encourages better methods among farmers.

Fourth—It teaches the farmer that he must be a business man to succeed.

Fifth—It makes a better locality in which to live. No man lives himself. Co-operation is the sheet anchor of the granger, through its influence the farmer is brought face to face with the live issues of the day and through its cohesive properties, the farmer will be able to demand a place in the busy markets of the world and recognized as a factor in the commercial and business centers. We are not enemies of capital, but we oppose the tyranny of monopolies, we do not begrudge the merchant his fair profits, but we want to dispose of the surplus middle man. Thence we must work together, reason together, act together and stick together, if we do so our aims and desires will meet with full fruition.

M. P. CONFERENCE.

One of the most pleasant sessions in the history of the Maryland Annual Conference closed at St. John's Church, Baltimore, on Tuesday night with the reading of the appointments by the pastor.
