ON A CIGAR.

WHO can blame the generous leaf,
Balmy antidote to grief?
Who the mild Cigar, despise,
In which such hidden virtue lies?

It soothes and aids us when we think,
It gives a zest to wine we drink;
Infuses pleasure, sends despair,
Serpentining into air.

It brightens converse, and it warms
The heart to social pleasure's charms;
Adds to the song; and every joke
Shines brighter through a cloud of smoke

With a Cigar, in pensive mood,
I moralize in solitude;
In its decrease I read my end—
Dread lecture of a dying friend.
