The following is a moral lesson elegantly expressed.

BRIGHT rose the morn: a spicy gale
Breath'd o'er the shelter'd Indian vale,
When Isabella, pure Nature's child,
Explor'd the hill and forest wild,
Loose flow'd her locks and silken vest,
As soft the breezes fann'd her breast.

On a near hillock's sun gilt side,
A snake display'd his scaly pride,
Envolv'd from many a graceful fold,
His sides were gay with green and gold:
The maid admir'd the stranger guest,
And fondly plac'd him in her breast.

Awhile secure, and warmly laid,
He lightly round her bosom play'd,
And raised his head in sportive guise,
And darted lightnings from his eyes;
Transported she the snake carest,
And strain'd him closer to her breast.

But once the luckless maiden found,
The horrors of the poison'd wound,
She felt the chilling dews of death,
The creeping pulse, the struggling breath,
And, dying, mourn'd the hour she prest
The glittering stranger to her breast.

NEWARK ACADEMY.

THE Trustees of the Academy in the village of Newark, in the State of Delaware, have engaged the Reverend Andrew Kerr Russell, [formerly Professor of Languages in Washington College, Pennsylvania] to take the charge of that Institution. The school is now open, and ready for the reception of students, who can be accommodated with boarding, tuition, &c. on terms perhaps more reasonable than at any other institution of the kind in this State. The long and well established reputation of this seminary—the character of the place for health, morality, and order—the comparatively small expence for which education can be here obtained; together with the complete capacity of the Teacher, to the performance of his duties furnish strong inducements to parents and guardians, who wish their children and wards to receive the benefits of a classical education, to place them at this Academy. The school is under the particular care and direction of the Trustees, who are determined to use every correct exertion to insure its usefulness and respectability.
