MONEY.

THE earth and sea we traverse o'er,
From pole to pole, from shore to shore,
And nature's latent springs explore,
For Money.

Through boiling deeps incessant ply,
And burning sands, a torrid sky,
Eternal polar frosts defy,
For Money.

The Furies dread of wind and wave,
That round his bark tremendous rave,
The hardy sailor dares to brave,
For Money.

The merchants' hope the happy gale,
To waft from far the cumbrous bale;
And watch the lucky hour of sale,
For Money.

The peasant makes his humble bow,
And daily plies the spade or plough;
And sweat distilling from his brow,
For Money.

Though patriot-like he puff and swell,
As if he had the heart of TELL,
The statesman will his country sell,
For Money.

The spring of virulent debate,
The wayward strife the vengeful hate,
And war, the curse of many a state,
Is Money.

Hard griping misers, lank and bare,
Denied to rest, and needful fare,
Torment their narrow souls with care,
For Money.

Attentive wait on Mammon's call,
Before his altar prostrate fall,
And barter conscience, virtue—all,
For Money.

The fortune-hunter heaves a sigh,
And for his mistress feigns to die;
But what has won his heart and eye?
Her Money.

The nabob, lo! the heir attends,
With crowds of specious, supple friends;
But mark their secret selfish ends—
His Money.

The jockey lies and cheats and swears;
The preacher stamps and foams and stares;
And hypocrites prolong their prayers,
For Money.

The advocate expounds the laws,
Right slyly twists a knotty clause,
And warmly pleads his client's cause,
For Money.

The doctor makes his deep surmise;
Affects to look most wondrous wise,
His learned recipe supplies,
For Money.

The quack proclaims unerring skill,
Prescribes his universal pill,
Will wound, or heal, or cure, or kill,
For Money.

The shuffling gambler packs the deck;
And knave and villain forge a check;
The thief and footpad risk their neck,
For Money.

The assassin, nor in rage nor strife,
Whets and conceals the bloody knife,
And coolly spills the sacred life,
For Money.

What will our credit still preserve?
Of action be the vital nerve?
And what will every purpose serve?
'Tis Money.

O Money! source of weal and woe,
Our very friend, our deadly foe:
More precious wealth let's ne'er forego,
For Money.

NEWARK ACADEMY.

THE Trustees of the Academy in the village of Newark, in the State of Delaware, have engaged the Reverend Andrew Kerr Russell, [formerly Professor of Languages in Washington College, Pennsylvania] to take the charge of that Institution. The school is now open, and ready for the reception of students, who can be accommodated with boarding, tuition, &c. on terms perhaps more reasonable than at any other institution of the kind in this State. The long and well established reputation of this seminary—the character of the place for health, morality, and order—the comparatively small expence for which education can be here obtained; together with the complete capacity of the Teacher, to the performance of his duties, furnish strong inducements to parents and guardians, who wish their children and wards to receive the benefits of a classsical education, to place them at this Academy. The school is under the particular care and direction of the Trustees, who are determined to use every correct exertion to insure its usefulness and respectability.

By order of the Board of Trustees.
