Luther Martin.

Luther Martin was born in New Brunswick, N. J., February 9th, 1748. He graduated from Princeton in the class of 1766 and began the study of law at Queenstown, Md., and finally settled for practice in Somerset county, in the same State. He rapidly became noted as a criminal lawyer and had one of the largest practices in the State. He took a prominent part in the Revolutionary discussions and framed the reply to Lord Howe in 1777 in answer to his proclamation to the inhabitants of the Peninsula between the Delaware and Chesapeake. In 1885 Martin was elected to the continental congress and two years later was appointed a Maryland representative in the constitutional convention. He vehemently opposed the adoption of that instrument and was dubbed by Thomas Jefferson, "The Federal Bull Dog". His greatest reputation was made in the defence of Samuel Chase, who was impeached before the United States Senate, and in the defence of Aaron Burr for treason at Richmond in 1807. In both of these cases he was eminently successful. He is described as being witty and audacious but slovenly in appearance and boisterous in his manner. In his latter years he suffered from a stroke of paralysis.

The Maryland Legislature passed a law for his benefit which has no parallel in history. It required every lawyer in the State to pay annually a license fee of five dollars, the proceeds of which were to be turned over to trustees for the use of Luther Martin. Luther Martin's last days were spent in New York city where Aaron Burr, who recognized his great indebtedness to him, gave him a home.

He died in New York city, July 10, 1826. Mr. Martin at one time practiced law in Chestertown.
