WRITTEN FOR THE TRANSCRIPT.

THE PAST.

Memory is the Treasure-House of the Mind Wherein the Monuments Thereof are Kept and Preserved.

I will now give you many little instances which I remember as well as though they had happened but a year ago although it has been more than seventy years ago.

We will take the farmer beginning the first day of January many years ago; he was surely in a land of Goshen. Their laborers began work the first of January and generally remained with them until the following year. In winter there was a great deal of work for the hired man to do as they had plenty of wood to cut and get up rails for fences, repair fences and flax to beat. Both the white and colored in those days wore in the summer what we called tough linen. In winter they wore kersey manufactured in our own neighborhood for we raised a great many sheep. In those days there were but few farmers who did not sow from five to ten acres of flax which was cut before there was a frost, bound and put in a safe, dry place. In winter it was taken out, beaten and hackled, ready to be spun and a great deal was spun at the farmer's home. Flax made a great deal of work and took considerable time. From flax we got what we called tough which was made into plow lines, copes and whatever could be used on the farm. Tough was also used for gun purposes. In those days we had the flint lock and muzzle loader; the tough was first used on the powder and afterwards on the shot. Tough in very dry weather would set fire to a sedge field or dry stubble. I recollect a friend of mine was shooting doves and was close to his neighbors' lane and over the lane was a sedge field of over forty acres. He was very much frightened and would not acknowledge that he had done it for a great many years.

In those days the farmer had very few farming implements. Nearly all farmers had two or three pair of oxen and two or three horse carts, no wagons. It was very seldom that a farmer sold calves. You could purchase a pair of good oxen for forty or forty-five dollars a pair. The farmers raised their own oxen and when a pair got out of commission they were generally killed for beef. They would weigh from 1000 to to 1200 pounds well fatened. The four quarters were cut up and salted as we salt pork. The four hind quarters were cut up and made into corn beef after the ham or dried beef had been taken off. Part of it was hung in the
