Nations of World Allot Year 1939 To New York Fair

World Exposition Already Growing Up; Seeks Active Participation of State

NEW YORK, (Special).—The New York World's Fair, in which every state in the nation must inevitably take small or prominent part, is out of its infancy.

Preparatory construction goes on night and day at the Flushing Meadow Site of 1216½ acres at the geographical centre of New York City. A steady flow of activities and announcements emanates from the Fair Corporation headquarters on four floors of the Empire State building. Judging from all of these, the Fair is a lusty, growing institution that will reach full maturity—no question about it—by the scheduled opening day, April 30, 1939.

The task of grading the site is about half completed. Battalions of men with trucks have already moved over 3,000,000 cubic yards of dry fill in the process of turning the waste marsh lands of the Flushing River basin into park ground. Other battalions are scooping out "meadow mat" for use as fertile top soil for the made lands, and in so doing excavate the beds for the two large lagoons featured in plans for the Fair.

The first of the 300 structures which, according to estimates, will house the 1939 Fair, has been completed and is ready for occupancy. This is the headquarters building for the field forces of today and the employment department of the exposition period.

Scheduled for early in the new year is the start of actual construction of the $900,000 Administration building. The designs for this structure, let under architectural contract a few weeks ago, are nearing the day of their approval in the Corporation's offices. Upon completion of this building, late in August, 1937, the Fair headquarters, bag, baggage and sales offices, moves to the exposition site.

"The most splendid and significant edifice projected for the 1939 international exposition," the Theme building, as described at Fair headquarters, is also well along in its contractual period. The estimated cost of this great building for the "Thematic Centre" of the exposition is set at $1,200,000. The preliminary designs are to be finished in about eight weeks and the final plans submitted within four weeks thereafter. Construction is scheduled to start immediately the designs are completed.

From this Theme centre will radiate all that is to be the 1939 Fair as conceived by its founders and rendered into concrete terminology and model by the Fair's Board of Design.

"Our job from now on is to give physical expression to the plan and theme of the Fair as announced and as set down on paper in our headquarters," says Grover Whalen, President of the Fair Corporation.

"Starting next April 1, we plan to complete the design of one major building every ten days for a period of seven months. In all, we expect to design no less than 30 major buildings to house the exhibits from every part of the world. Some 300 structures, in all, are planned for the Flushing Meadow site, within a few minutes' ride from Manhattan."

Without solicitation on the part of the Fair, more than 250 American business house and instituttions have begun preliminary conversations regarding their participation and are already planning exhibits. Five of the great nations of the world have already assured the Corporation that they would erect their own buildings, while no less than 32 other nations have informally indicated their desire to participate.

And then, on top of all this display of keen interest, comes the announcement that the International Convention Bureau, meeting in Paris, has allocated the year 1939 to the New York Fair. This means that the New York Fair has exclusive ranking as the "one international exposition" of 1939, and assures it of the active support of the 21 nations signing the agreement.

President Roosevelt has just extended official invitation to the nations of the world. Governor Herbert H. Lehman, of the host State of New York, has extended invitation to the governors and residents of 47 states. Grover Whalen, likewise, has invited the governors in a letter pointing out that "the commercial consequences of the New York World's Fair are so great and important that they alone would justify the active participation of every state."

Fair Commissioners are already in South America and Europe. Still others are on their way to the Far East and other foreign shores. Major Dennis E. Nolan, retired, as head of the Department of Foreign, State and Municipal Participation, will himself make representation to the governors and legislatures of the various states.

Meanwhile, under the direction of Harvey D. Gibson, President of the Manufacturers Trust Company, and Richard Whitney, former president of the New York Stock Exchange, the prominent figures in the financial capital conducted a 23-day campaign to sell $27,829,500 in debenture bonds of the Fair to finance the construction period.

Every confidence is being expressed that the Fair not only will "pay its way," but that it will bring a billion dollars more of revenue into Greater New York and stimulate American industry in general to an extent many fold that amount.

The total cost of producing New York's Fair, including collateral improvements, is set at $125,000,000. Statisticians estimate that the attendance will total more than 50,000,000 persons.

The City of New York, the State of New York, and the Government of the United States, according to expectations, will account for $35,000,000 of the total expenditures and thus lend an official backing never before achieved.

Poor Richard's Day

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

Throughout our country numerous organizations are staging again the annual celebration of Poor Richard's Day.

Its purpose is to honor Benjamin Franklin—journalist, advertiser, scientist, philosopher, author of Poor Richard's Almanac, statesman and, above all, a Great American.

As a reminder of the principles to which our nation is dedicated, the annual celebration of his birthday on January 17 should rank high on America's patriotic calendar. The counsels of Benjamin Franklin are reflected not only in our greatest historical documents — the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution—but in the entire life and fabric of our Republic.

Wise and true when the nation was born, those counsels have remained, through a century and a half, enduring beacons for the political guidance of all our people—whether in public office or in private life. Here, for example, are a few of his comments on subjects still dominant in our thoughts—

Patriotism

"Where liberty dwells there is my country."

The Constitution

"I hope, for our own sakes, as a part of the people, and for the sake of our posterity, that we shall act heartily and unanimously in recommending this Constitution . . . and that we may turn our future thoughts and endeavors to the means of having it well administered."

Public Debt

"He that goes a-borrowing, goes a-sorrowing."

Self-Reliance

"They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

This is the type of wisdom for which generations of Americans have honored Benjamin Franklin. Clearly and simply expressed, it remains as applicable today as during the years of his life. America might well hope that its statesmen will continue to honor that wisdom today. In no way could our nation pay greater tribute to Benjamin Franklin, or reap greater benefits from his sage counsels.

Topeka . . . Every day for twenty-five years, Fred Hess, head timekeeper at a railway shop in Topeka, Kansas, talked by telephone with C. H. Beronius, payroll clerk. Then, on the silver anniversary of his employment, Mr. Hess visited the railway offices a mile away for the first time and was introduced to Mr. Beronius. "Why walk when you can telephone?" asks Mr. Hess.

Havana . . . Telephone installations showed substantial increases with 37,943 telephones in operation at the end of 1935 as compared with 31,650 the previous year, Assistant Commercial Attache Charles H. Ducote, of the U. S. Department of Commerce, reported. Long distance telephone service between Havana and the United States was inaugurated April 11, 1921, through deep-sea cables. With the establishment of telephone service to foreign countries, Havana became a part of this international network.

Radio Telephone Connection Saves Fishing Trawler Crew

Radio telephone equipment, a development of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, installed aboard the Gertrude M. Fauci, a fishing vessel operating from Boston, was undoubtedly the means of saving the crew of this boat recently. The vessel sprung a bad leak off Nova Scotia and her master, Captain Patrick McHugh, called the shore station of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company at Green Harbor over the radio telephone, reporting his vessel's position and asking for immediate assistance.

Albert F. Coleman, marine technical operator at Green Harbor, saw from his chart that none of the other vessels of the fleet of fishing boats owned and operated by Charles M. Fauci, all of which are equipped with marine telephones, were in that viciniiy, so he immediately had a general SOS sent out from Coast Guard headquarters.

Within a few hours after the SOS was broadcast, the trawler Lemberg of Halifax was standing by ready to take off the crew of the Fauci. Captain McHugh placed a final telephone call on Green Harbor reporting the arrival of the Lemberg and that he and his men were about to abandon the ship, which was in immediate danger of sinking. During that last conversation Captain McHugh was standing in two feet of salt water and the batteries, which operated the telephone equipment, were partly submerged, but his words still came clearly over some 400 miles of the icy Atlantic to the fishing company's office.

Radio telephone apparatus was first made available to vessels off the New England coast during the latter part of 1932, according to the Bell Laboratories Record. Previous to the present incident, the telephone has taken an important part in a number of rescues, where without this service both men and vessels would undoubtedly have been lost.
