Cairo . . . Automatic telephone exchanges were first introduced in Cairo, Egypt, in 1932 and in subsequent years at Alexandria, Port Said, Tanta and a few other important provincial cities, including Guineh, near Cairo. The policy is to extend gradually this system over the entire country, according to the American Commercial Attache at Cairo.

* * *

Hollywood . . . When Hollywood wants extras, it gets them by telephone. The switchboard of a central casting bureau there handles as many as 30,000 calls a day, bringing actors and producers together.

* * *

Buenos Aires . . . Argentina's principal telephone company, the United River Telephone Company, in Buenos Aires, has just recently completed 51 years of existence. Starting in 1887 with a handful of employees, 11 years after Bell's invention, the company has grown as rapidly as the country until it now has 302,000 subscribers. Argentina has 48 per cent of all the telephones in South America. In the international field the company has made it possible for Argentine subscribers to be connected with 32,000,000 telephones in 60 countries.

* * *

Philadelphia . . . Telephone operators are less susceptible to throat ailments than are stenographers or almost any other type of woman employee, according to a noted Philadelphia surgeon. "I've never treated the throat of a telephone operator who talks quietly all day—there is no need to shout into the telephone." Records of the telephone companies reveal that cases where it is necessary to relieve an operator from duty because of voice or throat ailments are extremely rare. This is attributed to the fact that each operator is given a course of training in the proper use of the voice and how to speak clearly and without strain.

* * *

Jerusalem . . . A dial telephone exchange with approximately 3,500 lines was recently inaugurated at Tel Aviv, Palestine, and it is reported that a similar type of exchange to serve the same number of subscribers and capable of ultimate extension to 8,000 lines has been ordered for Haifa. It is expected that the Jerusalem automatic exchange will also soon be ready for service, according to the American Consular General there.

Margaret "Dibby" Osterwald, a long distance operator in the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company at Washington, D. C., is shown with Major Bowes. Miss Osterwald appeared on Major Bowes' original "amateur hour" recently. "Dibby" specializes in blues songs and is much in demand at private parties around Washington.

Road Notice.

We, the undersigned taxpayers of Calvert county, do hereby give notice that after thirty days from the date of this notice, we will petition the County Commissioners of Calvert county to establish a public road over the private road leading from the Ferry Landing State Road to Jones Point, a distance of about two and one-half miles. This road will serve about fifteen families, and deed for the right of way will be given to the public.

Dated September 20th, 1938.

TELEPHONE RESEARCH ACTIVITIES REVIEWED

Telephone Talkers

The popular idea that a person who wants to say something merely starts talking and keeps on until he is through, or until he runs out of breath, is not true of telephone talkers, according to a report by A. C. Norwine and O. J. Murphy of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, New York City. Instead, the average telephone user never talks longer than about six seconds without at least one short pause. On the average there is a pause about every three seconds. Nearly a fifth of the time is wasted in these short pauses that no one notices.

As part of the studies being made by the telephone industry of what might be called the anatomy of speech, the telephone engineers attached to a long distance telephone circuit between New York and Chicago an apparatus to keep records, not of the words pronounced, but of the speech energy passing over the line. A total of 51 calls was recorded, lasting a little more than 13,000 seconds. Everyone was found to talk in short bursts or cascades, called talkspurts, separated by the pauses mentioned.

Since almost anyone can hold his breath at least 20 seconds without discomfort, breathing pauses cannot explain this. Just what is the real reason remains a mystery, perhaps something not unlike the well-known habit of a reader's eye moving along a line of type, not continuously, but in a succession of quick jerks with pauses between. Perhaps human ears hear best in similar short spurts of sound, so that everyone automatically learns to talk this way.

Marriage Custom

Bridal couples in Scotland's border counties observe the centuries-old custom of having hot ale served them when they walk from the altar.

Pancakes on Shrove Tuesday

The English custom of eating pancakes on Shrove Tuesday arose from the economy of making use of the eggs and fat which were formerly forbidden articles of diet during Lent.
