Wheat Insurance Covers Crop Loss, Not Price Loss

Like all insurance companies, the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation —in charge of the Government's program of "all-risk" wheat insurance—invests the premium it receives in a reserve. However, this reserve, unlike that of most insurance firms, is not carried in the form of bonds and mortgages. It is made up of actual wheat.

The "all-wheat" feature of the wheat crop insurance program is regarded by sponsors of crop insurance as one of the foundation stones in a simple and workable plan for insuring growing wheat against all unavoidable hazards.

In early attempts to insure crops, policies insured the farmer's crop at a given value. Thus price changes, which may occur rapidly, frequently upset the "odds" or the acturial data on which the insurance rates were established. Insurers found themselves paying for price losses as well as crop losses.

Under the Federal crop insurance program the price doesn's enter the picture. The grower insures a given number of bushels, he pays his premium in terms of bushels, and the premiums are invested in the reserve of wheat storage. Changes in price of wheat do not affect the amount of insurance the farmer carries, nor the liability of the insurance reserve. If an insured farmer suffers a crop loss, he may draw from the Corporation enough wheat to bring his production up to the insured amount. If he prefers cash rather than actual wheat, the Corporation may sell the grain at the current market and give him the proceeds.

The insurance reserve is in storage at warehouses located conveniently to the regions in which crops are insured.

The Low Down From Hickory Grove

Every once in a while you will pick up a paper and somebody is poppin' off about women in business, and how successful they are, etc.

But stenographers and young women who know their onions, they quit the office soon as they get married. They quit before the so-called head of the house gets hep that he can loaf and play pool, while the little woman brings in the bacon.

But right down to brass tacks, most fellers, they would rather turn over their paycheck to some gal who knows something about the design and flavor of a mince pie versus a gal who can maybe manage a plumbing shop, or can put the shot, or do some man's job. Most fellers, they are kinda half-way fearful to tie up with these go-getters.

Men in women's jobs or in women's garb, they would be laughing stock.

Smart gals—they stay feminine.

Yours, with the low down,

Sickness From The Notifiable Diseases

Three groups of diseases—measles and other so-called children's diseases; the respiratory diseases—influenza, tuberculosis and the pneumonias; and the venereal diseases—were responsible for over 97 per cent of the total sickness from the "catching" diseases reported to the State Department of Health during the first six months of he current year. The rest was scattered among the fifty or more other diseases on the reportable list.

The report as summarized by Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the Department follows: "From January 1 to June 30, inclusive, of this year, 33,928 cases of communicable diseases were reported to the Department; 23,408 from Baltimore City and 10,520 from the counties. During the same period of 1938, there were 22,927 cases reported; 13,146 from Baltimore City, and 9,681 from the counties. The measles epidemic of last winter was responsible for this year's high total.

"There were 14,147 cases of measles during the first six months of the year in comparison with 1,645 during the same period of 1938. Scarlet fever with 916 cases, whooping cough 821, diptheria 88, chickenpox, German measles and mumps with a combined total of over 3,800 cases, brought the total for the so-called children's diseases for the half year, up to nearly 20,000 cases.

"Over 5,000 cases of respiratory diseases were reported—1,098 of influenza; 1,563 of tuberculosis; and 2,609 of the pneumonias, in comparison with 373 of influenza; 1,614 of tuberculosis and 2,129 of the pneumonias, during the corresponding period of 1938. The venereal diseases were charged with over 8,000 cases; 6,447 of syphilis and 1,610 of gonorreah in comparison with 6,625 cases of syphilis and 1,710 of gonorreah during the first six months of 1938.

"Typhoid fever, with only 35 cases reported since the first of the year, reached a new 'low' for that disease. There were also 33 cases of Rocky Mountain spotted fever (tick-bite fever), and 23 of undulant fever which is usually contracted through the use of unpasturized milk from infected cattle, in comparison with 55 of typhoid, 20 of Rocky Mountain spotted fever, and 23 of undulant fever, during the first half of 1938.

"The total for the first six months of 1939 also included 52 cases of Vincent's angina ("trench mouth"), 2 of malaria and 12 of pellagra. The record for poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) is entirely blank. No cases of that disease have been reported so far, this year.

"Practicing physicians are asked to report all cases of communicable diseases they attend or that are brought to their atttenion, to the nearest county or city health officer, or to the State Department of Health, in order that the necessary measures for prevention or control may be gotten under way without delay. The completeness of the reporting depends, of course, upon the interest and willingness of the physicians to cooperate. As our records indicate, the health authorities in Maryland have had such cooperation to a marked degree."

The Oddest Job

Brisbane, the capitol of Queensland, Australia, has some of the oddest jobs in the world. Take the man who sniffs bottles, for instance. Many of the empty bottles that reach a brewery have contained oil or kerosene, and all trace of smell must be got rid of before the bottle is refilled with beer. In one brewery as many as 4,000 dozen empty bottles are received for filling every day, and the dexterity with which the specialists sniff their way through thousands of "dead marines" is something to wonder at.

Mile-A-Minute Bus

The world's fastest bus service is not in England, Germany, or the U. S., but is in the Arabian Desert! The route, says The Commentator Magazine, is over six hundred miles long, from Damascus to Bagdad, and although the temperature on this run varies from zero to 145 degrees Fahrenheit, a steady average of slightly over sixty miles an hour is maintained.

The buses are mammoth vehicles with every comfort. They are built of stainless steel. The joints are welded instead of riveted, so as to be sealed against whirling sand, and the walls are insulated with three inches of kapok to maintain an even temperature. Until the buses came, continues the Commentator Magazine, camels took a month to make the journey. Now the powerful Diesels eat up the miles in less than 15 hours —including stops—while the crew of two guide by compass, not road map.

To Remove Stains

There's a cure for most summer stains if they are treated without delay.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture is still sending out that comprehensive free Farmers' Bulletin, No. 1474-F, on Stain Removal. This publication tells several ways of dealing with each kind of stain, and what chemicals, solvents, and other cleaning materials to keep on hand for emergencies. It has special information on treating summer stains from fruits and beverages, ice cream, mildew, rust, grass green, scorch, and perspiration.

Quick action is the first requisite with any sort of stain. It's best to take out spots immediately, or at least, before laundering the article, for hot water and soap will set several kinds of stains hopelessly. Sugar and starch spots yield readily to gently sponging with plain cool water. Carbon tetrachloride is valuable for taking out grease and oil stains. Glycerin should be used first with stains containing tannin. And boiling water poured from a teakettle held 3 or 4 feet above the stained area, the cloth being stretched over a bowl and held with a rubber band, will usually carry off new grape juice and fresh berry stains.

Peaches, pears, and plums contain tannin, as do tea, coffee, ginger ale and other soft drinks, beer, tobacco, and damp leather. Tannin stains will be set by heat, alkali, and age. Except for stains from coffee containing cream, articles stained by any of the foregoing should be soaked first in warm glycerin. If necessary after rinsing, repeat. If traces still persist, a sodium perborate bleach can be used on white fabrics. This is made by dissolving 2 or 3 tablespoons of the bleach in a cup of water and soaking the stained spot in the solution. Rinse again before laundering.

If coffee has cream in it, sponge the spot first with carbon tetrachloride. Then pour boiling water from a height as for grape or berry stains.

Stains from food containing albumen, particularly egg, milk, meat, or gravy, should first be sponged with cold water. If the food contains fat, oil, cream, or chocolate, sponge first with carbon tetreachloride to dissolve the grease. Dry, then use cool water, and finally rub the stained place with plenty of soapsuds before laundering.

Automobile grease spots are common in summer. Rub a little lard or white vaseline on the spot first to loosen the grease. Sponge with carbon tetrachloride, applied on the wrong side of the material, to force the dirt onto the cleaning pad that should be placed underneath all spots being rubbed. The article can then usually be washed with soap and water.

Danger At Intersections

Dangerons days for motorists are at hand, the Keystone Automobile Club declares in a statement calling attention to the seasonal hazard of summer growths obscuring vision of drivers at intersections. State, county and local authorities are urged by the club to act in the interests of public safety by requiring the trimming of trees, hedges and other growths which constitute a menace to the motoring public.

"Warning of this danger in past years," said Matthew P. Hanley, Manager of the Eastern Shore Division of the club, "resulted in appreciable improvement of highway conditions. In many cases, property owners do not fully realize the hazard motorists are subjected to, and are quick to take remedical action when the matter is brought to their attention."

The danger is particularly serious at points where "slow" and "stop" signs are obscured, the club official declared.

"Motorists on the 'stop' street," he said, "enter intersections without warning of danger or knowledge of law violation. at the same time, drivers on highways which the obscured signs are supposed to protect are placed inperil because they are expecting cross traffic to give them right of way and are unprepared for the emergency when vehicles from the cross road loom before them

"We believe motorists should take cognizance of these conditions and approach intersections at greatly reduced speed."

"War the Greatest of These"

Around the council board of hell,
with Satan at their head,
The three great scourges of humanity sat.
Gaunt famine, with hollow cheek and voice, arose and spoke:
O Prince, I have stalked the earth,
And my victims by ten thousands I have slain.
I have smitten old and young.
Mouths of the helpless old, moaning for bread, I have filled with dust.
And I have laughed to see a crying babe tug at the shriveling breast
Of its mother, dead and cold.
I have heard the cries and prayers of men go up to a tearless sky,
And fall back upon an earth of ashes.
But, heedless, I have gone on with my work.
'Tis thus, O Prince, that I have scourged mankind.
And Satan nodded his head.

A slender girl, carrying a dim lantern symbolic of eternal hope, was his only guide to happiness

The love of Jane Barnes is Evans Follette's only opportunity to rehabilitate himself. A melancholy dreamer, he was left completely discouraged by the war, and looked to her for guidance and for love. Though she returned his affection, she was encouraged by unforseen circumstances to marry wealthy, rakish Frederick Towne. Her decision, which remains in doubt until the final chapter, is one you'll applaud.

"The Dim Lantern" is a completely human, all-absorbing story by Temple Bailey, one of America's most widely read authors. You'll enjoy every fascinating installment.
