A KENT COUNTY COON HUNT

In Which The Clever Animal Proved To Be Too Much For His Pursuers

The raccoon is the largest and the most clever and the fiercest wild animal which the Kent County hunters seek. Tricky to a point of almost intelligence, nervy when driven to a corner, and so game that he will battle against overwhelming odds to the death, he will give a good account of himself at all times. It is difficult to run him to his lair, but when you do so, he will fight to the finish and die game before he will be captured.

The other night we had an opportunity to see the Kent County raccoon in his native haunts for the first time. The party was made up of six and Broad Neck was selected as the ground for the chase. We were out around nine o'clock and several times the dogs "struck" and, for a time, it looked like we were in for a lively chase at the very start, but each time circumstances prevented us from getting near our quarry.

Somewhat after midnight, however, we came in contact with what we were seeking. Out in the dense undergrowth of a swamp, where the bull briars and the knarled branches of stunted trees struggle for supremacy, we finally came upon our game. By the side of a small stream, the raccoon, with "hand line" out for small fish—his favorite dish—was enjoying his chief sport, when our faithful dogs sent out the signal for which we were looking for several hours. Hotter and closed in our skillful quarry. Dogs closed in on our skillful quarry Dogs that had been carried on a leash were freed, and as they "harked" to the running coon dogs, the excitement ran high as the fresh impetus was put into the chase. Then came the real sport.

True to tradition, the raccoon stuck to the tangled underbrush for protection for nearly a mile, in his effort to check his pursuers. But the fleet-footed dogs pushed after him swiftly and he abandoned his regular haunts and took to the open fields, trying out his speed against them, and the dogs gradually shortened the gap between them and their hoped-for prey. Our party had been swelled to a dozen men by this time and as the dogs broke cover, our party was close behind them, the many lanterns blinking in the night like fireflies as we hurried on the chase.

When hard-pushed, a raccoon will resort to almost anything to elude his pursuers. But we had some swift-footed dogs and when our quarry rushed to the open he was picking the battle ground for his enemies. Then across big fields sped the raccoon, with about a dozen hounds after him in full cry, seemingly gaining on him at every bound. Finally in the distance we heard the note of the "tree dogs" and we thought we had put our quarry in a bad way. But we were not equal to our resourceful quarry and when we reached the dogs they were facing Lankford bay, the clever animal having swam across the stream and eluded his pursuers. The chase had been a hard and an exciting one, and the hunters were satisfied with their evening's sport.

Your Library.—Consider what you have in the smallest chosen library. A company of the wisest and wittiest men that could be picked out of all civilized countries in 1,000 years have set in best order the result of their learning and wisdom. The men themselves were hid and inaccessible, solitary, impatient of interruption, fenced by etiquette; but the thought which they did not uncover to their bosom friend is here written out in transparent words to us, the strangers of another age.

—The birthdays of two great Americans occurred in this month—Washington's and Lincoln's. Now if we could only get President Wilson's birthday changed to the same month, what a great combination we would have.
