Farm and Household.

Preserving Cabbage Till Spring.—The following method of preserving cabbage through the winter, is taken from the Germantown Telegraph, and is undoubtedly one of the best that has been advised: It is to plant or to set them up in rows as they grow—that is with the roots down—fill in with soil pretty freely, then make a covering by planting two posts where there is a fence to rest on, or four where there is not, allowing for a pitch to carry off the water; lay bean poles opposite the way of the pitch, and cover with corn fodder or straw or boards. In using through the winter, avoid as much as possible the sun side and close up again. We have kept our cabbages for about twenty years this way in a perfect state through the winter and into the spring, and could, even up to the first of May, if desirable. We see other methods recommended, and they may answer just as well, but as to our own we speak from a long experience.

Judicious Care of Horses.—All horses must not be fed in the same proportion, without regard to their ages, their constitution or their work—the impropriety of such a practice is self-evident. Yet it is constantly done, and is the basis of disease of every kind.

Never use bad hay on account of its cheapness, because there is no proper nourishment in it.

Damaged corn is exceedingly injurious, because it brings on inflammation of the bowels and skin diseases.

Chaff is better for old horses than hay, because they can chew and digest it better.

Hay or grass alone will not support a horse under hard work, because there is not sufficient nutritive body in either.

When a horse is worked hard his food should be chiefly oats—if not worked hard his food should be chiefly hay, because oats supply more nourishment and flesh-making material than any other food—hay not so much.

Mix chaff with corn or beans, and do not give the latter alone, because it makes the horse chew his food more, and digest it better.

For a saddle or coach horse half a peck of sound oats and eighteen pounds of good hay are sufficient. If the hay is not good, a quarter of a peck more of oats. A horse which works harder may have rather more of each; one that works less should have less.

Rack feeding is wasteful. The better plan is to feed with chopped hay from a manger, because the food is not then thrown about, and is more easily chewed and digested.

Oats should be bruised for an old horse, but not for a young one, because the former, through age and defective teeth, can not chew them properly; the young horse can do so and they are thus properly mixed with saliva and turned into wholesome nutriment.

Fattening Turkeys.—It is a goodly sight, as the summer days wane, to see the flocks of Turkeys coming home from the woods and pastures at night-fall with full crops. If the farm has not been overstocked with these birds, they have very largely made their living upon grasshoppers, crickets, worms, and other small fry. The regular food they have had has been rather to keep them wonted than to supply any lack of forage. As the cool nights come on, and the supply of insects declines, the business of fattening properly commences. It should be remembered that plump, well-dressed turkeys not only bring a higher price in market, but enhance the reputation of the producer, and make his market sure for future years. The turkey is one of the finished products of the farm, and one of the greatest luxuries in the [illegible]. The farmer should do his [illegible] fattening his flock for the shambles. The main business now is to lay on fat, and the birds should have every night and morning a full supply of nutritious and fattening food. Instinctively the turkey follows his feed, and if the supply is abundant at the farm-yard, he will not stroll far from home. Boiled potatoes, mashed and mixed with meal, and fed moderately warm, is a very excellent food, both to promote growth and to fatten. If the pigs can be robbed of a part of their milk, and it be mixed with a part of the hot potatoes and meal, it will very much improve the dish. It is very desirable to supply the place of insects with some kind of animal food, and butchers' scraps is one of the cheapest and most desirable forms of food for poultry. Grain should be given at least once a day with the soft and warm feed. Nothing is better than sound corn. The Northern corn is thought to contain more oil than that of Southern growth. Old corn should always be used for this purpose. The new corn keeps them too loose. In feeding only so much corn should be thrown out, as the birds will eat up clean. Take a little time to feed them, and study æsthetics as you watch the iridescent hues upon the glossy plumage. There is nothing more charming upon the farm in the whole circle of the year than a hundred or two of these richly-bronzed turkeys feeding near the corn-crib. You can afford to enjoy the disappearance of corn while the turkeys are increasing in weight.

Painted Vehicles.—When vehicles have been newly painted do not be in a hurry to use them; it is economy to let them stand until the coat is thoroughly hardened.

Inhaling Ammonia is an excellent remedy for headache and will often remove catarrhal cold. The aromatic spirits of ammonia is especially prepared for heartburn and dyspepsia. Ten drops in a wine glass of water affording relief. The spirits of ammonia can be similarly used but is not so palatable.

Mince Veal and Eggs.—Take some remnants of roast or braised veal, trim of all browned parts, and mince it very finely; fry a shallot, or onion, chopped small, in plenty of butter; when it is a light straw color add a little pinch of flour and a little stock, then the mince meat, with chopped parsley, pepper, salt and nutmeg to taste; mix well, add more stock if necessary, and let the mince gradually get hot by the side of the fire: lastly add a few drops of lemon juice. Serve with sippets of bread fried in butter round, and the poached eggs on the top.

The Accomplished Housewife and the Brutal Husband: A Domestic Tragedy.

From the New York World.

I.

"Dear Dolly, I'll be home at five
And bring a college friend
To dinner—so surpass yourself."

II.

Such missive 'twas did send
A husband to his wedded wife,
Who as to the art of cooking
Knew all Miss Juliet Corson knows
Or is Mrs. Beeton's book in.
What shall I say in eulogy?
Ere she in hand would take
A frying-pan she would be led
A martyr to the stake.
Not that its use she quite contemned,
Though she preferred to broil,
For fish and oysters she would draw
Crisp from the candent oil.
The little dinners she got up
Were chefs d'œuvre that did seem
Delightful as the angel's meal
Mentioned in Wilton's dream,
Where Eve, ere there was any veal
Served him up "dulcet cream."
But although Wordsworth would have called
Her a pluperfect woman,
In one detail, as you shall see
Hereafter, she was human.

III.

Home went her husband and his friend;
She did to the door hersel' come
And let them in, the while she was
Glowing a full-faced welcome.
She had the saddest news to tell—
Her cook that very morning
Had taken her boxes and her leave
Without a moment's warning,
And left the house in such a state
That she felt a wish within her
That her lord had ta'en his college friend
To an hotel for dinner;
But as he was an old friend and
Could not of his time be chooser,
She had done her feeble best, and if
She had failed they must excuse her.
When next his friend was coming to town
Let him but write a letter,
And she would make due efforts then
To entertain him better.

IV.

All pallid grew her husband's cheek
And black his brow, because
He had been telling his friend how good
A housekeeper she was.
They had not many months been wed,
And since that he did win her
This was the first time he had brought
A friend home with him to dinner.
And of the lore of a woman's ways
And mind as much knew he
As a child knows of Josephus Cook
That is at its A. B. C.
But gracious answer made his friend
To check the husband's gloom,
And soon the little company
Sate in the dining-room.

V.

A cosey dining-room it was—
A cheery dining-table:
Without pale snowflakes shot across
A sky of chilly sable,
Within the fire glowed on the hearth,
And the gas burned clear and bright,
The bread beneath was golden-brown,
The damask snowy white,
And every glass and spoon and knife
Did glitter in the light.
A waitress of thirteen or so
Stood, rosy from the fire;
Never in Dickens was a maid
That prettier was or spryer—
The dishes at a wish advance
And at a wish retire.
Miss Marion Harland, Ude, Careme,
Miss Carson, Delice,
Great Billat-Savarin himself,
Being duly sworn, would say
That never better dinner was
Served anywhere any day,
From the Alpha of the Blue Points to
The Omega of cafe.

VI.

The cloud upon the husband's face
Lifted when he did taste
The inaugural spoonful of the soup
That was before him placed;
But though her eyes to diamonds were
With satisfaction turned
His spouse lamented audibly
It seemed to her 'twas burned.
"Oh! if upon last Sunday week,
Mr. Brown, you had been here!
Then we had something really nice—
Don't you remember, dear?"
But her unconscious lord replied,
"My love, that was not bad;
But this that you prepared to-day
Is the best we ever had."
And on, disparaging everything,
The smiling hostess ran,
From the cauliflower beneath its crust
Of grated Parmesan,
To the canvas-back that she had cooked
As it should be cooked pardi,—
Three times the heated kitchen round
She had let it briskly fly,
And served it with a mayonnaise sauce
To a salad of celery,
Thereto a bottle of champagne
The dryest of the dry.
"This 'dainty duck—oh, dear,'* she cried,
"Is overdone, I know.
I wish you only had been here
This day two weeks ago."
She would not hear, that good housewife,
Her enemy say so!

VII.

But every time she made appeal
To her delighted lord
To say that this or that meat should
Be loathed, despised, abhorred,
He answered her with a glance of pride
And an absence of all tact,
It was the best she had ever cooked—
Which was, indeed, a fact;
And when she bade him recollect
How a previous one was better,
The idiot husband would reply,
"'Tis the best you have cooked yet," or
Words to some similar effect.

VIII.

And when the meal was o'er
And the husband had sped the parting guest
From their hospitable door.
And he came with words of love and pride
To greet her wifely ears,
Upon the sofa he found his bride
In an agony of tears.
"Dolly, my love, what ails you now?
Overheated is the room?"
She whacked him on his anxious brow
All with the good hearth-broom;
"You wretch, you viper, you Thing," she cried,
In mingled grief and scorning,
"This very minute I'll go home—
That is, to-morrow morning.
Oh, why—oh why, when one loves him so,
Can a husband not take his cue,
And when his wife disparages
Her cooking come to her rescue?
Oh, why cannot a husband say
Her best is not near so good
As something she cooked some other day?—
If you loved me well you would!"

IX.

She has not sued for a divorce
And they are friends once more,
But never can her love sor him
Be what it was before.

The Sun for 1880.

THE SUN will deal with the events of the year 1880 in its own fashion, now pretty well understood by everybody. From January 1 until December 31 it will be conducted as a newspaper written in the English language and printed for the whole people.

As a newspaper, The Sun believes in getting all the news of the world promptly, and presenting it in the most intelligible shape—the shape that will enable its readers to keep well abreast with the age with the least unproductive expenditure of time. The greatest interest to the greatest number—that is the law controlling its daily make-up. It now has a circulation very much larger than that of any other American newspaper, and enjoys an income which it is at all times prepared to spend liberally for the benefit of its readers. People of all conditions of life and all ways of thinking buy and read The Sun; and they all derive satisfaction of some sort from its columns, for they keep on buying and reading it.

In its comments on men and affairs, The Sun believes that the only guide of policy should be common sense, inspired by genuine American principles and backed by honesty of purpose. For this reason it is, and will continue to be, absolutely independent of party, class, clique, organization, or interest. It is for all, but of none. It will continue to praise what is good and reprobate what is evil, taking care that its language is to the point and plain, beyond the possibility of being misunderstood. It is uninfluenced by motives that do not appear on the surface; it has no opinions to sell, save those which may be had by any purchaser with two cents. It hates injustice and rascality even more than it hates unnecessary words. It abhors frauds, pities fools, and deplores nincompoops of every species. It will continue throughout the year 1880 to chastise the first class, instruct the second, and discountenance the third. All honest men, with honest convictions, whether sound or mistaken, are its friends. And The Sun makes no bones of telling the truth to its friends and about its friends whenever occasion arises for plain speaking.

These are the principles upon which The Sun will be conducted during the year to come.

The year 1880 will be one in which no patriotic American can afford to close his eyes to public affairs. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the political events which it has in store, or the necessity of resolute vigilance on the part of every citizen who desires to preserve the Government that the founders gave us. The debates and acts of Congress, the utterances of the press, the exciting contests of the Republican and Democratic parties, now nearly equal in strength throughout the country, the varying drift of public sentiment, will all bear directly and effectively upon the twenty-fourth Presidential election, to be held in November. Four years ago next November, the will of the nation, as expressed at the polls, was thwarted by an abominable conspiracy, the promoters and beneficiaries of which still hold the offices they stole. Will the crime of 1876 be repeated in 1880? The past decade of years opened with a corrupt, extravagant, and insolent Administration intrenched at Washington. The Sun will do something toward dislodging the gang and breaking its power. The same men are now intriguing to restore their leader and themselves to places from which they were driven by the indignation of the people. Will they succeed? The coming year will bring the answer to these momentous questions. The Sun will be on hand to chronicle the facts as they are developed, and to exhibit them clearly and fearlessly in their relations to expediency and right.

Thus, with a habit of philosophical good humor in looking at the minor affairs of life, and in great things a steadfast purpose to maintain the rights of the people and the principles of the Constitution against all aggressors, The Sun is prepared to write a truthful, instructive, and entertaining history of 1880.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the Daily Sun, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

A Talk With Fruit Growers.

I HAVE now growing, on my farm, a fine seedling Peach Nursery, (from the seed of the Smock,) of over 200,000 trees.

Being from Smock seed, and growing on land that never grew trees before, they must prove especially hardy and prolific.

I shall bud 50,000 (commencing June 15th) for this Fall's planting; such trees will run from 3 to 4 feet in height.

I shall bud the balance in August, for planting the following fall. As must all planters have preference for special varieties, I propose to take orders, before the budding is done, customers furnishing their own buds if they prefer; so that all may be accommodated. Do not fail to give this matter proper consideration, and send in your orders early. By so doing you can secure just the varieties you want; but if delayed till you are ready to plant, nurserymen may not have the kinds you prefer. I will give instructions how to forward buds, upon inquiry.

I HAVE A GENERAL ASSORTMENT OF ALL KINDS OF NURSERY STOCK.

Twenty years' experience as an extensive Fruit Grower and Nurseryman, certainly entitles me to a reasonable share of patronage on this peninsula.
