red letter P. and while she staid there she professed to be a Methodist and attended meeting very closely. But after several years, she contrived to incur my mothers displeasure and was notified to quit the premises. Molly then moved to St. Joseph's Chapel, and died in sight of the Church a very pious Catholic.

About rod 'd. to the Eastward of Molly's Old House, was a spot, we all dreaded to approach. It was the grave of one of the Shanks family, who had died of the Small Pox. I remember well that one of our visitors, a lad from another neighbourhood, laughed at our fears, and leaped upon the top of the grave and shook the stone at the head. I thought him the rashest fool I knew.

Mallingly's Old mill (rod m) was another dreaded spot, not by daylight however, for then we had no hesitation in passing the place, but woe to the luckless night hunter, that rambled in darkness towards that locality. The noises, that greeted the ears of the intruder were terrible — to ~~intruder~~ hear. I never heard them, except from imitation — and clubs and other missiles fell thick and fast around the feet of those who tramped within the haunted hollow after dusk. Of course there is but little of this I believe now. The whole idea possibly arose from a single instance of one night hunter's efforts to frighten another.

Caintuck or Kentuck (See red dotted line around "Caintuck" in the northern corner of Shanks's Venture,) was a field cultivated by Lad. Teppett which, for a few years, produced so well as to receive the name of the new eldorado of the Maryland Emigrants. It is now a pine grove, and has been for thirty years.

Note. Inasmuch as "Buck Park Resurveyed" and "Roundabout Resurveyed" were both resurveyed in Locke's time, it should not be considered strange if the landholders found that the courses and distances of the resurveys ran wide from holdings and impressions. Locke doubtless laid a new build of those resurveys. B.T. 1863
