Chautauqua Lecturer Harding and Ben Greet

Charles R. Taggart relates an interesting reminiscence of his meeting, years ago, with an actor-manager and a certain editor. It was in the "pre-circuit Chautauqua" era, when there frequently occurred gaps of two or three days between engagements. During one of these gaps Mr. Taggart found himself in a mid-west town, where an independent Chautauqua was in progress. Together with the actor-manager of the play, which was appearing on the Chautauqua and the editor of the local paper, Mr. Taggart was a dinner guest at the home of a local physician. It proved to be a memorable dinner. The actor-manager told interesting tales of his theatrical tours in England, among them an account of his appearance at the home of John Ruskin. The editor recalled fascinating incidents of a recent visit to Scotland. It was an evening that Mr. Taggart now places among his most treasured reminiscences, because the town was Marion, O., the actor-manager, Ben Greet, and the editor, Warren G. Harding.

The "Old Country Fiddler," Mr. Taggart, is a favorite with the American public. Mr. Taggart is a real Yankee, and his dialect is not assumed. He just dons his famous felt hat and spectacles, takes his fiddle and chats confidentially about his various adventures in city and country, keeping everybody in a roar of laughter, playing now and then an old-time hornpipe or jig that sets the nerves atingling. Mr. Taggart's "Old Country Fiddler" has reached the ears of the public thru the medium of the Victor Talking Machine records, and you will want to hear his stories and tunes from the man himself.

SPORTS

Ruth, with the close of the baseball season about a month away, has 27 homers to his credit, Williams having 33 and Walker 30. Ruth smashed out four hits last week, while Williams got a pair and Walke rthree. Ruth, if he continues his present drive, will make good his prediction and finish the season in the lead. We believe he will do it, in spite of the tremendous handicap to which he was subjected. This will mean more glory and more money for Ruth next year.

Fox pups have been reared by mother dogs, but it has remained for a Maine silver fox ranchman, Frank A. Harvey, to bring up a litter of fox pups with a cat foster-mother.

Nearly all the work of making a standard baseball today is done by machinery. Some of the most highly developed machines are still "trade secrets" and are operated in locked rooms where no outsiders are permitted to see them in operation. The ball is weighed five times in the course of manufacture for it must weigh exactly five ounces. A small rubber ball about an inch in diameter forms the center of the ball. Around this rubber sphere is wrapped a few layers of coarse twine. By means of accurately adjusted machinery layers of blue and white yarn are then wound. During this process the ball is several times soaked in a cement solution and laid aside to dry in order to give it compactness. Finally a still smaller cord is wrapped snugly around the ball. The cover is made of best grade horsehide, cut by hand and prepared for the purpose in a special solution. After the ball is put into clamps the cover is sewed on with cotton thread which has great frictional strength. The cover seams are ironed out and the completed ball is polished.

With the football season approaching swiftly, the local interest has become keen in the Washington College footteam for the year and an effort is being made to secure funds from the alumni and give the team a two weeks' training preliminary to the regular preparation for the opening of the season. There is no question about it, Washington College has met with unprecedented disaster the last two seasons and an effort will be made this year to make the team go stronger and make a better showing generally. The great difficulty that always confronts the coaches is lack of material, and this year will be no exception. But if the material at hand can be given the training mentioned above, we believe it will greatly aid the general efficiency of the outfit.

Thomas H. Healey, Esq., of Chestertown, a football player of wide knowledge and considerable ability, will play with a professional team which has been organized in Baltimore, this year. This team will be composed of college players of ability and the games will, no doubt, be interesting and hard-fought.

—C. Norman Jefferson has purchased all of the stock of the Buick Sales Co. in Easton and is now the sole owner. Mr. Jefferson will discontinue the mercantile business and give all his attention to the company. Mr. Jefferson is well and favorably known in Chestertown and it is to be regretted that he did not find some way of returning to Kent county to transact business. We can't have too many of the type of Mr. Jefferson.

—Concord, a little village about 3 miles from Seaford, has a most interesting history. It is situated upon a once-important tributary of the Nanticoke river, and was once the scene of busy industries, such as hatter shops, cutting and shipping of oak bark for tanning leather, shipbuilding, grain marketing, puncheon and barrel making and lumbering. The industry has ceased and the town now lies almost forgotten and few reside there.

WANT GOOD BRIDGE AT CRUMPTON

People Of That Town Not Satisfied To Have Wooden Structure, And Prefer A Modern Concrete Bridge

The people of Crumpton are vitally interested in the new bridge that will soon be begun at that place to replace the old structure. The people there don't merely want a bridge that will serve to form a connecting link between Kent and Queen Anne's counties. They want a real, concrete structure that eventually may be an appropriate part of a hard-surface highway leading from Dudley's Corner to Lambson.

For many years residents of this section have felt that they were not being given the conisderation to which they felt they had a right to. Right now everbody is concerned about the new bridge.

Several weeks ago the County Commissioners of Kent and Queen Anne's began preparations for the construction of a wooden bridge over the river, to replace the one that has long since begun to fall into decay. The contractor razed the old bridge, and then after the only means or crossing the river had been removed, the War Department notified the builders that no further steps could be taken until the U. S. Government granted permission for a bridge across the stream.

This was a most unexpected interruption, but the people of that section prepared to meet the emergency the best way they knew how. Then the meeting of the people of that section was held, which was advertised in this paper, and they want a real bridge, one which will stand the increasing traffic and a structure that eventually may see a stone road leading to it from Dudley's Corner, and extending on the other side to Lambson in Kent county.
