A 7-year-older, with a punster's mark on his brow, at dinner, asked his mother what was in a jar on the table

'Pickles, my son,' was the reply.

'Then, mamma, please pickle little one out for me,' came with stunning force from the child, and the mother fell over a chair and fainted.—Anon.

A Washington letter lays that Miss Bayard is not only very pretty, but extremely bright. She was the young lady who astonished Oscar Wilde by her keen repartee to his patronizing remark:

'Are you going to the German, Mr. Wilde?' she asked the night of his lecture there.

He is a very small boy, just beyond the limits of babyhood. His precociousness is well recognized by those who know him, and sometimes people try to corner him in a logical way.

The other day some one took him up and asked him if he was not papa's boy.

He answered, 'Yes.'

'And are you mamma's boy, too?'

'Yes,' replied Charlie.

'Well, how can you be papa's boy and mamma's boy both at the same time?' was asked him.

'Oh,' replied Charlie, indifferently, 'can't a wagon have two horses?'—Anon.

Mr. J. A. McBeth, Pacific Express Office, Denver, Col., was cured by St. Jacob's Oil of an excruciating pain in the neck, and also toothache. One application did the work.

Funnier than was intended:

At a recent dinner party there were two sisters present, one a widow who had just emerged from her weeds, the other not long married, whose husband had lately gone to India for a short term. A young lawyer present was deputed to take the young widow in to dinner. Unfortunately he was under the impression that his partner was the married lady whose husband had just arrived in India. The conversation between them commenced by the lady remarking how warm it was for the season of the year.

'Yes, it is quite warm,' replied the lawyer. Then a happy thought suggested itself to him, but he added, with a cheerful smile:

'But not as hot as the place to which your husband has gone.'

The look with which the lady answered this lively sally will haunt that unhappy man till his death.—Cincinnati Commercial.

QUAINT ANECDOTES ABOUT DOGS.

From Golden Days.

Very likely every reader has been informed that 'dogs delight to bark and bite' because 'it is their nature.' It was so with a certain fierce dog in New Orleans, as the following incident will set forth: At the electric light station in that city, a practical joker dampened a portion of the office floor, placed a piece of meat in the wet spot, and so arranged two wires that an electric current passed through the meat. The dog in question was called in after the arrangements had been completed, and about the first thing he saw was the meat. He walked eagerly up to the moist place to seize the morsel. As soon as he touched the meat, the bystanders were startled by a growl. He had felt the electric current, and had backed off a few steps. As he stood sniffing and growling, the joker said, 'Sic him, Jack!' and as if that were all he needed, the dog at once sprang upon the meat. Over tumbled the assailant, rolling half-way across the office floor. As soon as he regained his feet he returned to the attack, and the fight between the animal and the piece of meat was kept up for several minutes. Finally the dog leaped through a doorway, and with his tail between his legs made a 'bee-line' down the street. If the poor brute thought at all, he probably concluded that the meat was bewitched.

Many anecdotes are told to show how dogs possess some of the kindly qualities usually thought to belong to none but the human race. The true little story about to be related is only another example of the kind, but it is interesting enough to be worthy of chronicle. A gentleman, who lives in Newton, Massachusetts, owns two setter dogs named Grouse and Scott. One day the dogs were out hunting all the forenoon. In the afternoon Grouse returned to the house alone, and it was evident that he had something in mind that greatly troubled him. He kept barking and running ahead of the gentleman's coachman, as if he would say: 'Do follow me.' So the coachman followed the dog into the woods. At last they came to a stone wall. Grouse jumped over the wall and the coachman followed. On the other side the man saw Scott. The latter dog had been caught in a trap, by one of his forefeet, and was crying piteously. When released Scott's foot was found to be much swollen, but no bones were broken. If it had not been for Grouse, perhaps poor Scott would have died in the trap. As soon as Scott was free, Grouse jumped around in great delight.

The wife of a farmer, whose home is near Mineral Point, Wisconsin, fell down stairs one day a few weeks ago. Her injuries were so severe that she was unable to walk, and it so happened that no other member of the family was at home. In this predicament she was quite cast down, for her broken leg needed instant attention, and she knew that she could not make her voice reach the ears of any neighbor. While the poor woman was bemoaning her painful situation, the dog of a neighbor entered the kitchen, wagging his tail as if to remark that he had come over to pay his respects. The sufferer called the dog to her side, and he at once seemed to perceive that something was wrong. When she tied a note around his neck and told him to take that to "Miss Millie," the dog ran swiftly to Miss Millie's house, which was his own home. As soon as the neighbor saw the note that was tied to the dog's neck, she read it, and, of course, she hastened to succor her suffering friend. In this instance the dog certainly proved himself "a friend indeed" by being "a friend in need.'

A young friend writes from New Berne, North Carolina, concerning the friendship existing between his pet dog and pet cat. The dog is about seven months old and the cat's age is about the same. "Although cats and dogs are deadly enemies," writes the correspondent, "the puppy is very considerate, sharing his meals and his sleeping-box with pussy. They curl up together every night and sleep without a snarl. The other day a large Newfoundland dog came into the yard and attacked the cat. The intruder nearly killed pussy at the first snap, but at that instant the puppy leaped from his box and became a vigorous defender of his friend. Never did knight of old fight more heroically in defense of the right. And the puppy was victorious, too. After the victory the dog and cat went to sleep in the kennel—a happy family, truly."

However poor one may be, some friends are apt to remain. While the editor of a paper published at Americus, Ga., was hunting in the woods, not long ago, he saw approaching two colored lads, and as forlorn a dog as ever merited the name of cur. The animal was clearly a castaway from 'good society.

'What is your dog named?' asked the editor.

'Tigh,' replied the elder of the boys.

'What's he good for?'

''Possums, rabbits, snakes and 'coons.'

'Can he kill anything by himself?'

'No, sah, but he kin with 'tother dog at home to help him.'

'Where is 'tother dog?'

'He's home, tied up to watch de house whiles we unes is gone. Come along, Tigh.'

And as they marched off, the aged animal gave a faint wag of his tail in humble gratitude.

The famous little lamb, which followed the famous little Mary to school one day, would appear to be a tame creature indeed, as compared with a certain dog at Midway, Virginia. This dog, the name of which was Ned, has many accomplisments, but his chief characteristic is his fondness for children. It is said that Ned goes to school with his master's children every morning regularly. When they go out to play he goes too, and he is quite expert at catching a ball. When the bells rings, he is the first to run into the school house, and when the classes are called up to recite, he takes his place at the [illegible] Of course, the teacher does not [illegible] but whenever, in a spirit [illegible] for the dog's bene[illegible]. SOME MORE ABOUT THE BAD BOY.

A PARROT MAKES THINGS LIVELY IN A PRAYER MEETING—HIS PA TAKES SOME LESSONS IN BOXING.

'You don't want to buy a good parrot, do you?' said the bad boy to the grocery man, as he put his wet mittens on the top of the stove to dry, and kept his back to the stove so he could watch the grocery man and be prepared for a kick, if them an should remember the rotton egg sign that the boy put up in front of the grocery last week.

'Naw, I don't want no parrot. I had rather have a foot boy around than a parrot. But what's the matter with your ma's parrot? I thought she wouldn't part with him for anything.

'Well, she wouldn't, until Wednesday night, but now she says she will not have him around, and I may have half I can get for him. She told me to go to a saloon, or some disreputable place and sell him, and I thought may be he would about suit you,' and the boy broke open a bunch of celery and took out a few tender stalks and rubbed them on a codfish to salt them and began to bite the stalks, while he held the sole of one wet boot up against the stove to dry it, making a smell of burned leather that came near turning the stomach of the cigar sign.

'Lookahere, boy, don't you call this a disreputable place. Some of the best people in this town come here,' said the grocery man, as he held up the cheese knife and grated his teeth as though he would like to jab it into the youth.

'Oh, that's all right. They come here 'cause you trust. But you make up what you lose by charging it to other people. Pa will make it hot for you the last of the week. He has been looking over your bill and comparing it with the hired girl, and she says we haven't ever had a prune, or a dried apple, or a raisin, or any cinnamon, or crackers and cheese out of your store, and he says you are worse than the James Brothers, and that you used to be a three-card monte man, and he will have you arrested for highway robbery. But you can settle that with pa. I like you, because you are no ordinary sneak thief. You are a high-toned, gentlemanly sort of a bilk, and wouldn't take anything you couldn't lift. Oh, keep your seat, and don't get excited. It does a man good to hear the truth from one who has got the nerve to tell it. But about the parrot. Ma has been away from home for a week, having a high old time in Chicago, going to theatres and things, and while she was gone I guess the hired girl or somebody learned the parrot some new things to say. A parrot that can only say 'Polly want's a cracker' don't amount to anything. What we need is new style parrots that can converse on the topics of the day and say things original. Well, when ma got back I guess her conscience hurt her for the way she had been carrying on in Chicago, and so when she heard that the basement of the church was being frescoed she invited the committee to hold the Wednesday evening prayer meeting at our house. First, there were four people came, and ma asked pa to stay to make up a quorum, and pa said, seeing he had two pair, he guessed he would stay in, and if ma would deal him a queen he would have a full hand. I don't know what pa meant, but he plays draw poker sometimes. Anyway, there was eleven people came including the minister, and after they had talked about the neighbors a spell, and ma had showed the women a new tidy she had worked for the heathen, with a motto on it which pa had taught her, 'a contrite heart beats a bob-tailed flush,' and pa had talked to the men about a religious silver mine he was selling stock in, which he advised them as a friend to buy for the glory of the church, they all went in the back parlor and the minister led in prayer. He got down on his knees right under the parrot's cage, and you'd a dide to see Polly hang on to the wires of the cage with one foot and drop an apple core on the minister's head. Ma shook her handkerchief at Polly and looked sassy, and Polly got up on the perch, and as the minister got warmed up, and began to raise the roof, Polly said, 'Oh, dry up.' The minister had his eyes shut, but he opened one of them a little, and looked at pa. Pa was tickled at the parrot, but when the minister looked at pa, as though it was him that was making irreverent remarks, pa was mad. The minister got to the 'Amen,' and Polly shook hisself and said, 'What you giving us,' and the minister got up and brushed the bird seed off his knees, and he looked mad. I thought ma would sink with mortification, and I was sitting on a piano stool, looking as pious as a Sunday school superintendent the Sunday before he skips out with the bank funds, and ma looked at me as though she thought it was me that had been tampering with the parrot. Gosh, I never said a word to that parrot, and I can prove it by my chum. Well, the minister asked one of the sisters if she wouldn't pray, and she wasn't engaged, so she said, with pleasure, and she kneeled down, but she corked herself, 'cause she got one knee on a cast-iron dumb-bell that I had been practicing with. She said, 'Oh, my,' in a disgusted sort of way, and then she began to pray for the reformation of the youth of the land, and asked for the spirit to descend on the household, and particularly on the boy that was such a care and anxiety to his parents, and just then Polly said, 'Oh, pull down your vest.' Well, you'd a dide to see that woman look at me. The parrot cage was partly behind the window curtain, and they couldn't see it, and she thought it was me. She looked at ma as though she was wondering why she didn't hit me with a poker, but she went on, and Polly said, 'Wipe off your chin,' and then the lady got through and got up, and told ma it must be a great trial to have a idiotic child, and then ma she was mad, and said it wasn't half so bad as it was to be a kleptomaniac, and then the woman got up and said she wouldn't stay no longer, and pa said to me to take that parrot out doors, and that seemed to make them all good-natured again. Ma said to take the parrot and give it to the poor. I took the cage and pointed my finger at the parrot and it looked at the woman and said 'old catamaran,' and the woman tried to look pious and resigned, but she couldn't. As I was going out the door the parrot ruffled up his feathers and said, 'Dummit, set up,' and I hurried out with the cage for fear he would say something bad, and the folks all held up their hands and said it was scandalous. I wonder if a parrot can go to hell with the rest of the community. Well, I put the parrot in the woodshed, and after they all had their innings, except pa, who acted as umpire, the meeting broke up, and ma says it's the last time she will have that gang at her house.

'That must have been where your pa got his black eye,' said the grocery man, as he charged the bunch of celery to the boy's pa. 'Did the minister hit him, or was it one of the sisters?'

'Oh, he didn't get his black eye at prayer meeting,' said the boy, as he took his mittens off the stove and rubbed them to take the stiffness out. 'It was from boxing. Pa told my chum and me that it was no harm to learn to box, cause we could defend ourselves, and he said he used to be a holy terror with the boxing gloves when he was a boy, and he has been giving us lessons. Well, he is no slouch, now I tell you, and handles himself pretty well for a church member. I read in the paper how Zuck Chandler played it on Conkling by getting Jem Mace, the prize fighter to knock him silly, and I asked Pa if he wouldn't let me bring a poor boy, who had no father to teach him boxing, to our house to learn to box, and Pa said certainly, fetch him along. He said he would be glad to do anything for the poor orphan. So I went down in the Third ward and got an Irish boy by the name of Duffy, who can knock the socks off any boy in the ward. He fit a prize fight once. It would have made you laugh to see pa tell him how to hold his hands and how to guard his face. He told Duffy not to be afraid, but to strike out and hit for keeps. Duffy said he was afraid Pa would get mad if he hit him, 'Nonsense, boy, knock me down if you can, and I will laugh ha! ha!' Well, Duffy he hauled back and gave pa one on the nose and another on both eyes, and cuffed him on the ear and punched him in the stomach, and lammed him in the mouth and made his teeth bleed, and then he gave him a side-winder in both eyes, and pa pulled off the boxing gloves and grabbed a chair, and we adjourned and went down stairs as though there was a panic. I haven't seen pa since. Was his eye very black?'

'Black, I should say so,' said the grocery man. 'And his nose seemed to be trying to look in his left ear. He was at the market buying beefsteak to put on it.'

'Oh, beefsteak is no account. I must go and see him and tell him that an oyster is the best thing for a black eye. Well, I must go. A boy has a pretty hard time running a house the way it should be run,' and the boy went out and hung up a sign in front of the grocery: 'Frowy Butter a Speshulty.'—Peck's Sun.

THE Plain English on Hair Balsam IS HERE EXPRESSED! OUR FREE CIRCULAR TELLS THE REST

Kansas, June 26th, 1882.
HARRIS REMEDY CO.—Gents—I used the Pastilles as directed and they completely cured me. In about one week from the time I commenced using them I began to sleep well and I continued to use all the box with constant improvement and since that time (Oct. 1881) I have felt like a new man. I truly hope that many of the sufferers will find out that you have a specific for nervous weakness and be cured by the same.
Respectfully Yours,
P. S.—You will not publish my name but persons visiting you may be referred to me and I will answer them.
To every young, middle age or old man troubled with nervous or physical debility or impotence sealed circular is sent free. Send full address on postal card to HARRIS REMEDY CO. St. Louis, Mo.
We want your address. You need our remedy. Send and be convinced of this.

REST not, life is sweeping by, go and dare before you die, something mighty and sublime leave behind to conquer time." $66 a week in your own town. $5 outfit free. No risk. Everything new. Capital not required. We will furnish you everything. Many are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men, and boys and girls make great pay. JOHN N. DODD
FUNERAL DIRECTOR
—AND—
Furnishing UNDERTAKER,
CHESTERTOWN, MD.

CASKETS, Burial Cases, Coffins, Fine Cloth Work, Shrouds, Burial Robes, Merino and Satin Linings, &c., of all descriptions and kinds, and all the requisites of first-class Funeral Furnishings constantly on hand, or furnished at the very lowest prices.

METALIC COFFINS and CASKETS, furnished upon short notice when desired. A full line of SHROUDS and BURIAL ROBES.

Patent Improved
COLD AIR ICE CASKETS for the preservation of the dead; also Embalming Fluids. I have recently introduced a remarkably cheap BLACK CLOTH CASKET, which in appearance is almost equal to the finest. Remember I do not confine myself exclusively to fine and high-priced work, but have an endless variety at medium and low prices.

I have THREE HEARSES, two large ones and one small white one for children and young persons; and with my handsome new Glass Hearse and fine pair of Black Horses, can furnish as fine a Funeral Turnout as can be seen in our large cities. I am constantly adding new features and improvements to my business, in order to keep up with the times; and as there are such changes in style and kind constantly going on, and, as is generally the custom, some friend is called into the embarrassing position of ordering what he supposes may be wanted, it would be much more satisfactory to all concerned to name the price of the article wanted

ALWAYS REMEMBER that I guarantee to furnish anything in my line, of the same kind and quality, at lower prices than any other establishment of the kind. Ever grateful for the very liberal patronage heretofore extended me, I respectfully beg a continuance of the same.

Residence second door above my shop.
Respectfully,
Aug10—tf. JOHN N. DODD.
