WIT, HUMOR AND WISDOM.

'Oh, people are not all as good as you and I are,' said the grocery man, as he watched the boy making a sneak on a bunch of grapes. 'But did you go to the circus?'

'Circus? Well, I should assimilate. And it is a wonder I am not there yet. But, whatever you do, don't ask pa if he was at the circus, 'cause he will kill you. You see pa and I drove up the race track, where a circus was, in the evening, and after the circus was out we waited to see the men take the tents down, and after they had gone we started home. It was darker than a squaw's pocket, and I drove out on the race-track, and the old horse used to be a racer and he pricked up his ears. Pa took the lines and said he would drive, 'cause we were out pretty late and ma would be nervous. I told pa I didn't believe he was on the right road, but he said he guessed nobody could fool him about the road to town, and bless me if he didn't drive around that track about eight times. Every time we passed the grand stand, which pa couldn't see on account of his eyes, I laffed; but I thought if he knew the road so confounded well I could ride as long as he could.

'After he had rode around the track about eight miles, and I was getting sleepy, I mildly suggested that we had better stop at a house and inqure the way to town, and pa got mad and asked me if I took him for a fool. Then he drove around a couple of times more, and the man that keeps the track he came out with a lantern and said, 'Hello!' Pa stopped and asked him what he wanted, and he said, 'O, nothin',' and pa drove on and told him to mind his own business. We went around the track again, and when we got to the same place the man was there and I guess pa thought it was time to inquire the way, so he pulled up and asked the man what he was doing there, and the man said he was minding his own business. Pa asked him if we were on the right road to town, and the man said if we wasn't in a hurry he would like to have us drive on the track all night, as it was a little heavy, and wanted to get it in condition to speed the colts the next day, but if we had to go we could drive out the gate and take the first left-hand road.

'Well, pa was mad, and he wanted to know why I didn't tell him we were on the track, but I told him he seemed to know it all, and it was dangerous to advise a man who knew it all. He didn't speak all the way to town, but when I put out the horse he said, 'Hennery, if this thing gets out your pa will have the reputation of being drunk. If you tell of it you are no friend of mine.' So I shall not say anything about it, 'cause it is a bad doy who that will go back on his pa.'—Peck's Milwaukee Sun.

'It would take a day in the recital, and then fill a big book to tell of the incidents that enter into the daily life of a Pullman car,' said J. W. Smittley, the resident superintendent of the company in Philadelphia, to a Press reporter, 'and then it would take another and larger book to contain what I have been told.'

'Are any of these stories true of fat men telling horrible tales about crashing through upper berths in order to secure lower berths?' was asked.

'It is true that facetious heavy-weights tell the stories in the hearing of timid persons,' was the reply, 'and it is equally untrue that any upper berths ever break down. A well-known New York journalist, who tips the beam at 300—suppose you know him—can be credited with being the originator of that yarn. He loves a joke, and as he is known to almost every palace car porter in the country, manages to carry out the sell very successfully whenever necessary. In case the gentleman reaches the train late and finds the lower berths occupied, he hunts around until he finds a nervous traveler in a place where he would like to be himself. Then he calls the colored porter and asks him if he has heard any further news of the Rev. Mr. Smith. The reporter, who is posted, replies, 'You mean de po' gemman what you mashed dat night you fell froo de berth?'

''Yes,' replies the ponderous traveler. 'I've often thought of that poor man, Jim. I think I broke one of his ribs and one of his arms, didn't I?'

''Two ribs and bofe arms, sah,' replies Jim, solemnly.

'And it was somewhere about this part of the car, wasn't it, Jim?' asks the heavy man, loudly.

'No, sah,' says the porter, 'you'se thinkin' ob de two orphans what you fell on dat night when we was near Buffalo. If you remember, sah, one ob de boys died, and de oder had his eye squashed out. De preacher, sah, was in de upper end ob de car. He wouldn't get outen de lower berth, sah.'

'Unfortunate man,' sighs the passenger, 'and I wasn't as heavy by fifty pounds as I am now, either.'

'By this time you can depend that the nervous traveler is getting his pantaloons on. Usually he peeps out, and when he sees the mountain of flesh that is talking, he is more than anxious to take the upper berth than to run the risk of being crushed to death in the middle of the night. It's a pretty good scheme, and generally works well to the fat man's satisfaction. As soon as the other man finds that a joke has been played upon him, he forms the joker's acquaintance, and, in almost every instance that I've heard, the friendship so strangely made is lasting, because the fat man is one of those jolly good fellows that nobody could stay angry at for more than ten minutes. There are lots of other incidents that, if strung together, might make a good story, but, as life is short and time precious, I think we had better leave the best ones for another day.'

The pretty nurse girls are rebellious in their minds at having to wear the grandmother caps with which they have been decorated by their aristocratic employers. The pretty nurse girl will have to accustom herself to the ways of the American aristocracy, if she is to get on. She ought to thank her stars that she was not born a man, to drive up to the dry-goods stores in the horrible livery of a coachman. The pretty nurse girl may marry rich some day, and then she herself can have a pretty nurse girl with a grandmother cap, and go about town to paralyze poor folks with her gorgeous magnificence. —Louisville Courier-Journal.

The boy that wears a watch is an important character. At school he is envied and on the street he is respected. None of the boys grab him and throw him down, for they might break his time-keeper. He has a way of twisting the chain when he talks, and of looking at his watch when he hears a railroad train, and saying twelve-ten or six-five, or eight-sixteen. The other boys stand around and regard him with admiration. He grows up and probably goes to college with a distinguished air, but in a few years he pawns his watch with a man who, as a boy, often stood around and admired it.—Anon.

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

MAYNE REID IN THE MEXICAN WAR.

THE Castle of Chapultepec, commanding the great road of Mexico, was successfully stormed by our troops on the 13th of September, 1845.

Reid was in command of the grenadier company of New York Volunteers and a detachment of United States marines, with orders to guard a battery which they had thrown up. The morning of the 13th was fixed for the assault. The batteries were ordered to cease firing at eleven o'clock, and the attack began.

Reid and the artillery officers, standing by their guns, watched the advance of the line with intense anxiety, which became apprehension when they saw that about half-way up the slope there was a halt. 'I knew,' he says in his account, 'that if Chapultepec was not taken, neither would the city be; and failing that, not a man of us might ever leave the valley of Mexico alive.'

Asking leave of the senior engineer officer to join the storming party with his men, he obtained it with the words, 'Go, and God be with you!' He was off at once, with his volunteers and marines. After a quick run across the intervening ground, they came up with the storming party under the brow of the hill, where it had halted to await the scaling ladders. 'At this point,' says Lieutenant Marshall, of the Fifteenth Infantry, 'the fire from the castle was so continuous and fatal that the men faltered, and several officers were wounded while urging them on. At this moment I noticed Lieutenant Mayne Reid, of the New York Volunteers; I noticed him more particularly at the time on account of the very brilliant uniform he wore. He suddenly jumped to his feet, and calling upon those around to follow, and without looking around to see whether he was sustained or not, pushed on almost alone to the very walls.'

Reid's action was not quite so reckless as this account of an eye-witness would made it appear. The outer wall of the castle was commanded by three pieces of cannon on the parapet, which, loaded with grape and canister, fearfully dedimated the ranks of the Americans at every charge. To advance seemed certain death. But death seemed equally certain whether the assailants retreated or remained where they were. Such is his own explanation of his conduct.

'Men!' he shouted out, in a momentary lull of the conflict, 'if we don't take Chapultepec the American army is lost! Let us charge up the walls!'

Voices answered: 'We will charge if any one will lead us!' 'We're ready!'

'Come on! I'll lead you!' shouted Captain Reid, as he bravely leaped over the scarp that had temporarily sheltered them, and made the charge already described.

There was no need, he says, to look back to see if he was followed. He knew that his men would not have been there, unless prepared to go where he led. About half-way up, he saw the parapet crowded with Mexican artillerists, on the point of discharging a volley. He avoided it by throwing himself on his face, receiving only a slight wound in his sword-band, another shot cutting his clothing. Instantly on his feet again, he made for the wall, in front of which he was brought down by a Mexican ounce-ball tearing through his thigh.

All the testimony goes to show that he was first before the wall of Chapultepec. Reid's lieutenant, Hypolite Dardonville, a young Frenchman, mounting the scaling ladders with the foremost, tore down the Mexican flag from its staff.

Before that, however, Reid was observed by Lieutenant Cochrane, of the Voltigeurs. Cochrane was pushing for the castle with his men, when before him, scarcely ten yards from the wall, an officer of infantry and a comrade were shot and fell. 'They were the only two at the time,' he says in his statement, 'whom I saw in advance of me on the rock upon which we were scrambling.'

Reaching the wall, Cochrane ordered two men 'to go back a little way and assist the ladders up the hill.' As they passed the spot where the wounded officer lay, he raised himself with evident pain, and sang out above the din and rattle of musketry, imploring the men to stand firm:

'Don't leave that wall,' he cried, 'or we shall all be cut to pieces. Hold on, and the castle is ours!'

Cochrane answered, to re-assure him: 'There is no danger, Captain, of our leaving this! Never fear!' Then the ladders came, the rush was made, and the castle fell.

'The wounded officer,' Cochrane continues, 'proved to be Lieutenant Mayne Reid, of the New York Volunteers.'

Lieutenant Marshall, to whom we are indebted for that vivid glimpse of the young officer in 'his very brilliant uniform,' describes the effect produced by the exploit,—all of those who witnessed or knew of it pronouncing it, 'without exception the bravest and most brilliant achievement performed by a single individual during the champaign.'—J. T. Trowbridge in St. Nicholas for November.

NOT TRUSTWORTHY.

ONE afternoon a gentleman was shown into Mr. Lamar's library.

'Mr. Lamar,' asked the visitor, 'do you know a lad by the name of Gregory Basset?'

'I guess so,' replied Mr. Lamar, with a smile 'That is the young man,' he added, nodding toward Gregory.

The latter was a boy aged 14. He was drawing a map at the wide table near the window.

'A bright boy, I should judge,' complimented the visitor, looking over the top of his glasses. 'He applied for a clerkship in my mill, and referred me to you. His letter of application shows that he is a good penman. How is he on figures?'

'Rapid and correct,' was the reply.

'That's good! Honest, is he?'

'Oh, yes,' answered Mr. Lamar.'

'The work is not hard, and he will be rapidly promoted, should he deserve it. O! one question more, Mr. Lamar; is the boy trustworthy?'

'I regret to say that he is not,' was the reply.

'Eh!' cried the visitor. 'Then I don't want him.'

That ended the interview.

'O, uncle!' cried Gregory, bursting into tears.

He had set his heart upon obtaining the situation, and was very much disappointed over the result.

'Gregory, I could not deceive the gentleman,' Mr. Lamar said in a low voice more regretful than stern. 'You are not trustworthy, and it is a serious failing; nay, a fault rather. Three instances occurred within as many weeks, which sorely tried my patience, and cost me loss of time and money.'

Mr. Lamar's tone changed into one of reproach, and his face was dark with displeasure.

'I gave you some money to deposit in bank,' he resumed. 'You loitered until the bank was closed, and my note went to protest. One evening I told you to shut the gate at the barn. You neglected to do so. The colt got out through the night, fell into a quarry, and broke its leg. I had to shoot the pretty little thing to put an end to its suffering.'

Gregory lifted his hand in a humiliated way.

'Next, I gave you a letter to mail. You loitered to watch a man with a tame bear. 'The nine o'clock mail will do,' you thought. But it didn't, being a way mail and not a through mail. On the following day I went fifty miles to keep the appointment I had made. The gentleman was not there to meet me, because he had not received my letter. I lost my time, and missed all the benefit of what would have been to me a very profitable transaction. It is not too late for you to reform; and unless you do reform, your life will prove a failure.'

The lesson was not lost upon Gregory. He succeeded in getting rid of his heedless ways, and became prompt, precise, trustworthy.

China and Glassware we hardly dare to risk saying anything about, as the lots announced are nearly always sold out in a few hours of the day they are presented. Watch the city daily papers for the announcements, and if these lots are sold when you come do not be disappointed, as we have new lots in every day or two.

In Furniture. Young couples should see

The new Ash Suite of Bed Room Furniture for $25.
The same goods in Cherry for $28.

Our Works at present turn us out only four suites per day of these goods, so that first come, first served. Nothing like this has ever been done in Philadelphia before.

A fine frame Body Brussels Carpet at $1.25 that we are willing to endorse as a good thing.

We are not permitted to give the makers' names. The goods are new this season, and fifty patterns at least to choose from.

The First Fall Offering of Ladies' Robes are all-wool, of ample material, in nine varieties, dark, rich hues, and the new patterns are on the palm-leaf order. The effect is much the same, if not a full equivalent, as though an expensive Cashmere Shawl were dissected and made into a robe, as is often done. The expense being infinitely less—$25.

Also a few Wrapper Patterns, Persian, and with a decided Oriental effect. The olive, old gold and rich, dark hues are subdued in a broad border of consistent but curious formation, 10 to 11 yards each. $2.00 per yard.

There are other lots equally interesting, and new things daily arriving.

Samples of Dress Goods sent by mail; a "Postal" will receive immediate attention.
