A NOBLE ANCHOR.

The great Creator to revere,
Must sure become the creature;
But still the preaching can't forbear,
And even the rigid feature;
Yet ne'er with wits profane to rage,
Be complaisance extended;
An atheist's laugh a poor exchange
For Deity offended!

When ranting 'round in pleasure's ring,
Religion may be blinded;
Or if she give a random sting,
It may be little minded;
But when on life we're tempest driv'n,
A conscience but a canker—
A correspondence fixed with Heav'n
Is sure a noble anchor.

—ROBERT BURNS.

SPRING FARM NOTES.

We venture the prediction that the man who begins right now stocking up the farm with good grade of pure-bred cows and heifers, and turns a respectable registered bull in at their head will in two or three years time fairly reap dollars for all dimes invested.

There will be a change in the system of swine breeding and feeding in a few years says an exchange. People are tiring of fat pork. They are calling for more lean and less fat, and corn will not answer the call. Other foods will have to be fed, foods that will give growth and lean meat.

It takes the same kind of food to resist cold weather as is required to add fat to pork. As a consequence it is almost impossible to fatten an animal exposed to the cold blasts of winter. This winter being particularly mild, it is to be expected that cattle will be well ripened when properly cared for.

Do not allow the birds to be destroyed. They are of too much benefit in destroying insects, worms, and pests that prey upon fruit and trees. The cat-bird eats and destroyes pear bugs; the wood-pecker digs in and destroys the borer; while the jay bird, chickadee, wren, thrush, robin and blue bird all do good work in the orchard.

The farming of the future must be gradually contracted in the number of acres. Less hard work over broad fields and closer attention to special paying crops on the fields that surround the house. More pasture, more stock and plenty of ensilage, this insures the purchase of less commercial fertilizer and the very best results from the contents of the barn-yard.

It is unwise to grow hay to be sold off the farm. Stock raising and grass growing are joint occupations. A higher price can be obtained for hay by converting it into beef, while the manure remains behind to add to the fertility of the soil. When the hay is sold off, the farm will sooner or later be impoverished, and the prices obtained will be less than if stock is kept to consume the hay.

There are fewer things that add more to the value of a farm and home, considering the cost, than a full supply of fruits, tree and small, and a sufficient number of shade and ornamental trees to supply necessary shade and protection. Care should be taken not to crowd. Make calculations for growth, as it may be necessary to thin out later on. A better appearance can be secured by giving them plenty of room at the start.

Dr. Ward, a distinguished New Jersey fruit grower, finds that the Minnewaski blackberry ripens with him as early as the Wilson. The plant is hardy and prolific, fruit large and sweet. Mr. J. H. Hale, the well-known Connecticut fruit grower, suggests, in the Hartford Courant, that this blackberry being hardy in New England, is likely to prove to be the early sort for which they have been so long looking.

Like Other Men.

He stood with one foot on the hub of the wheel, talking to his wife, who sat in the wagon holding the lines.

"How much did you say, Mary?" he asked.

"A dollar."

"What! A hull dollar fur two pairs of stockings?"

"Yes."

"We can't afford it. That's perfectly reckless."

"But I want 'em."

"Yes, I suppose so, but you can't have 'em. Look-a-here. I've got to have a necktie, a new hat, a pair of suspenders, a pair of buckskin gloves, some socks, a plug of tobacco and a jack-knife, and that'll take all the money we can spare."

"Can't I get one pair?"

"Well, mebbe; but you'd better look fur cotton, and sunthin' at about twenty cents. We'll never git rich in the world if we don't keep expenses down."

PERSONS wishing to improve their memories or strenghten their power of attention should send to Prof. Loisette, 237 Fifth Ave., N. Y., for his prospectus post free, as advertised in another column.

DO NOT suffer from sick headache a moment longer. It is not necessary. Carter's Little Liver Pills will cure you. Dose, one little pill. Small price. Small dose. Small pill.

AN editor out West put a love letter he had written into the copy-box, and his editorial on the proper observance of marital duties he sent to his love. The letter appeared in his paper, had he is chasing his compositors all over the country with a tomahawk in each hand.

MRS. CHAS. SMITH, of Jimes, Ohio, writes: I have used every remedy for sick headache I could hear of for the past fifteen years, but Carter's Little Liver Pills did me more good than all the rest.

THE fashions in dress have now reached the riotous point when "everything goes."

12. MIDNIGHT, DEC. 31.

Once more the sea of Time rolls up toward the shore,
And in a mighty surging billow breaks.
The wave is gone, like all the others gone before
Some sands are gone—the spoil that each wave takes.

Forever, as the ocean wars upon the land.
Time crumbles down the limits man has set,
Nor rocky shore, nor level lines of rippling sand
May hold their place; there is no barrier yet

Alike, the ruthless torrent crumbles all away,
The pleasant gardens of our youth are gone;
The land where life was idle, where our toil was play,
Where every pebble like a jewel shone.

Gone, too, are all the fields, where manhood's toil
Made fertile plenty gladden arid ground;
Where life, enriched with labor's bounteous spoil,
Its full fruition and enlargement found.

The sea wall, builded up with fond, delusive hope,
To bar the progress of the mighty sea,
Proved all too weak with this dread enemy to cope—
It lies in fragments on the barren lea.

Now, beating at the feet of those few sterile rocks,
Where old age clings to some possession still.
Relentless years are rolling up with rhythmic shocks,
To shatter o'en the hopes life could not kill.

So all goes down beneath the rolling tide of years;
The billows swallow up life's narrow shore.
So shall it be, and still shall fall man's idle tears,
Until the day when Time shall be no more.

—David A. Curtis in Once a Week.

HENNESSY'S LAST FIGHT.

ONE MAN'S BATTLE AGAINST 300 FIENDISH REDSKINS.

Pat Hennessy, the Old Freighter, Kills Thirty Indians—His Winchester Plays Out—A Boston Tenderfoot Who Had Grit at the Pinch.

Quite direct runs the old trail southward from Arkansas City, Kan., to Oklahoma City. Along this trail the traveler's eager eye beholds a monument erected out of native stone. Here lies the body of brave Pat Hennessy, who was murdered by the Cheyenne Indians in 1876. Many are the tales told of Pat and his many narrow escapes from the red devils of the plain. Of these it is not the purpose to speak at present, but to record his last great fight, where Pat proved himself a very Gatling gun of death to his implacable foes. Pat is well remembered as an old time Fort Sill freighter, and at the time of his tragical death was on his way from Caldwell, Kan., to the fort with six wagons and three trail wagons. With him were three men. One of these, a passenger, a tenderfoot from Boston, had a great desire to kill an Indian. John Korison was his name. He little knew how soon he would get more killing than he wanted and undergo an experience seldom equaled in border tragedies.

THE BOSTONIAN'S UNERRING FIRE.

One afternoon, shortly after they had gone into camp, they were attacked by a band of 300 or 400 Cheyenne braves with all the suddenness and terrible ferocity peculiar to Indian warfare. Hennessy saw them coming and instantly ordered the men to run for a canyon just west of the trail. They misunderstood the direction, and instead of west took the trail north. The mistake hastened their doom. With wild yells of savage delight the Indians circled around the three men. Korison was left behind in the race. He saw Indians on every side. No chance of escape, death certain. His alarm was over. The tenderfoot was a man. With a rapidity that indicated a previous training, he raised his Winchester and fired into the Indians with shots so quick they almost seemed one. Deadly shooting, too, for five painted warriors had gone down, their death cry ringing out and mingling with the dog like snarls of several who were wounded. The Indians returned the fire and the three white men fell.

Old Pat saw the fight from his retreat in the rocks. His mind had undergone a great change in regard to the man from Boston, and as the savages rushed in to scalp the three fallen men his own deadly Winchester came to his shoulder, the sights caught the dusky form of a big Indian just in the act of scalping Korison. The rifle belched forth its messenger of death, and a red fiend sprang high into the air, then sank down, still and dead. It was not that fiend of the plains, Black Scar, but another redskin, who, rushing forward to try for the scalp of Korison, met his own well deserved fate from the sure aim of Pat. With yells of fury, the Indians left the three prostrate forms to attack their more formidable enemy, and from the belts of three bucks there dangled the scalps of three whites.

Hennessy was well prepared for defense, an immense rock behind, rocks at the side and in front also, which was the only point at which an attack could be made, and there over the rock gleamed with deadly menace his 16-shot Winchester. Swift now and hot the fight. Over 300 against one, but that one cool, determined and desperate, a host in himself. Into the advancing horde go rifle balls on errands of death, killing and wounding as they tear through the red ranks. With insane courage the savages rush up within ten yards of the rock. Pat no longer sighted his gun; he rests it on a rock, cocks it with hand and pulls the lever and trigger with the other, and point blank into the red devils he sends an almost continuous stream of leaden balls. They waver, break, retreat, but only for a moment.

HIS FIRING CEASED.

The chief has been killed, but Black Scar takes command, waves aloft the scalp of Korison, points to the dead braves, calls for vengeance and orders the fight to be renewed. This time the attack is made in front and at both sides. If they can scale the rocks at the sides, Pat will be at their mercy. From the death dealing point in front the good old Winchester again pours forth its terrible destruction, and at the loud command of Black Scar they surge round in front, face to face with their desperate foe. Pat's revolver, a self cocker, does deadly work, fired into the yelling mass ten feet away, the last load gone, and again the Winchester at close range covers the ground with dead and dying. The red monsters are forced back from that death vomiting rock, back from a single gun, back from one man, back from brave Pat Hennessy.

In a few moments the whole band would have fled, when suddenly the firing ceased. Pat's gun had become so dirty and hot by such constant firing that, horrible to relate, while attempting to put in a cartridge it stuck fast and could not be forced either in or out. The Indians supposed he was out of ammunition and with savage yells rushed in to secure their prize. Pat met them with clubbed gun, and broken heads and bones were plenty as they came within sweep of his strong arms in the death struggle; but those behind still pressed on and he was soon overpowered and secured. Infuriated at the loss of so many of their number, they took poor Pat, tore his scalp from his head, bound him to one of his own wagon wheels, emptied sacks of oats around him and set them on fire. Just as they commenced their devilish torture and dance around their victim they heard a shot echo from the distance. The alarm was raised that the soldiers were coming and the stampede at once began. Picking up the wounded and some of the dead, the Indians mounted their horses and scampered off.

The evening shades gathered darkly and all was still as the fire burned, and the spirit of brave Pat passed away and found rest in the land of the hereafter.

There he was buried the next day by some other freighters. The bodies of thirty dead Indians were also found and were afterward removed by their red brothers. Pat was known as a brave man. His friends have erected a headstone, simply inscribed with his name and date of his death. And thus is marked the grave of a hero and the spot on which occurred the most remarkable fight of one man against so many recorded in border annals.—St. Louis Republic.

LEFT HIS WEALTH TO THIRTEEN NEGROES.—James Roman, a bachelor of Middletown, Ky., died some time ago leaving an estate of $30,000 and an only relative, a niece, Mrs. William Hydron. Roman made a will dividing his entire estate among thirteen negroes who had been his slaves before the war. Mrs. Hydron is contesting the will.

Illustrated.

Harper's Bazar will continue to maintain its reputation as an unequalled family journal. Its art illustrations are of the highest order, its literature is of the choicest kind, and its Fashion and Household departments of the most practical and economical character. Its pattern-sheet supplements and fashion-plates alone will save its readers ten times the cost of subscription, and its articles on decorative art, social etiquette, house-keeping, cookery, etc., make it indispensable to every household. Its bright short stories, and timely essays, are among the best published; and not a line is admitted to its columns that could offend the most fastidious taste. Among the attractions of the new volume will be serial stories by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, Mrs. Alexander, William Black, and Thomas Hardy, and a series of papers on nursery management by Mrs Christine Terhune Herrick.

Harper's Weekly.

Illustrated.

Harper's Weekly has a well-established place as the leading illustrated newspaper in America. The fairness of its editorial comments on current politics has earned for it the respect and confidence of all impartial readers, and the variety and excellence of its literary contents, which include serial and short stories, by the best and most popular writers, fit it for the perusal of people of the widest range of tastes and pursuits. Supplements are frequently provided, and no expense is spared to bring the highest order of artistic ability to bear upon the illustration of the changeful phases of home and foreign history. A new work of fiction from the pen of William Dean Howells, and one by Capt. Charles King, will beamong the leading features of the Weekly for 1889.

THE TRANSCRIPT!

A First Class Country Journal.

IT GIVES EACH WEEK

A COMPLETE HISTORY OF LOCAL EVENTS!

And the Subscription Price is Only

$1.00 PER ANNUM!

A Word or two About the Transcript.

We have reduced the subscription price of the TRANSCRIPT to $1.00 per annum. In spite of that reduced price, we mean to maintain it as one of the Best County Weeklies published in Maryland. Understand—the TRANSCRIPT does not propose, in matters of enterprise, or in any of the qualities that go to the making of a good Newspaper, to play second fiddle to any paper in the State.

FOR $1.00, CASH IN ADVANCE,

The TRANSCRIPT will visit you fifty-two (52) times in the year, and will give you each week full information concerning all that is taking place in the county, beside a large collection of other interesting reading matter. We desire to reach every family in the county, and we mean to do it. In thirty days after the first day of January, 1889, we added between fifty and sixty new names to our subscription books, and the good work is only begun. Do you believe that $1.00 is a fair price for a First-Rate County Newspaper? Then send your name and $1.00 to the TRANSCRIPT.

A WORD OR TWO ABOUT ADVERTISING.

When we took charge of the TRANSCRIPT, we found it with a well-established subscription list, reaching every part of the county, paying its weekly visit to many hundreds of families, and laying its weekly budget of information before thousands of readers. The TRANSCRIPT is a good advertising medium, and we mean to make it a better one. Its subscription lists are steadily growing, and its sphere is constantly enlarging. It is now, and we mean to make it more and more a medium which no advertiser, who wishes to fully reach the Kent county public, can neglect to use. Advertising is simply informing the public that you have certain goods to dispose of. And the more fully you give the information, the more purchasers you are likely to attract, and the better prices you are likely to obtain. He who scrimps in advertising is not wise While he may save himself an advertising bill of $8 or $10 or of $15 or $20,

As the case may be, he may lose himself several hundred dollars by the loss of bidders and purchasers. Whether in real estate or personal property, or in merchandise—in anything that is to be offered to the public, liberal advertising pays.

THE TRANSCRIPT

Claims a fair share of advertising patronage on the business principle of giving full value in return for ever cent it charges.

Our Job Department!

The TRANSCRIPT has a constantly growing Job business. It has a Job Press that does first-rate work, and we are prepared to make estimates on all manner of work, at most reasonable figures. We ask that you will obtain our estimates, and give us a chance on anything you may desire done, whether in the way of Wedding Cards, Ball Programs or Invitations, Circulars, Flyers, Posters, Bill Heads, Letter Heads, Envelopes, Catalogues—whatever it is, we shall be obliged for your order, and we shall endeavor to give satisfaction, both in style of work and in prices.
