BASEBALL HISTORY MADE AT WASHINGTON COLLEGE TUESDAY WHEN UNIV. OF PENN WAS BEATEN—COMMENT OF SPORTING REALM

Washington Triumphs Over Penn

Baseball history was made at Washington College Tuesday afternoon when Washington College's meteoric aggregation reached the peak of condition and, setting a new standard for athletics at W. C., defeated the University of Pennsylvania baseball team somewhat handily by the score of 5 to 2. At no time during the exciting contest did Penn have a chance of winning, they being clearly outplayed from the start in every department of the game.

Big colleges have locked horns with historic old Washington College on other occasions, and although W. C. has, at times, made a good showing, they have never before been able to put over a victory. Back in 1900 Harvard, on their southern trip, stopped over at Chestertown and severely defeated W. C., in spite of the fact that Burris and Townsend, two of the most brilliant pitchers who ever occupied the mound at W. C., were in the game. Carlisle, later on, was played, and although Professor Johns, now of the W. C. Faculty, and one of the best twirlers that ever played the game at the college, held the Indians to one hit, the latter won the contest. We all know of the gallant fight that W. C. made against Penn last year and how Wright rose to the height of his pitching career and how a few blunders cost W. C. the game. And so we might go on at length and tell our readers how Washington made good at numerous times in the past when against the big college teams, but was never able to quite push over a victory. It has remained, however, for Captain J. T. Kibler, a Chestertown boy, to develop a team that has wrested from a big college team a real, sure-enough, honest-to-goodness victory, with no ifs, or buts, or doubtful decisions to render the final verdict odious or doubtful. It also seemed a part of fate that Bradford, substituting for Wright, the real pitching ace of the team, should be called upon to do the honors on the mound that makes the game one of bright spots upon the athletic canvas of the College's history. When it became known that Wright, the W. C. star twirler and one of the best that ever tossed a ball at the College, was incapacitated by a boil on his neck, a wail of despair resounded throughout the halls of the College and about the streets of the town. With the team in a somewhat demoralized condition and with Wright on the bench, the most optimistic W. C. man looked for a bad defeat. Who would take his place to stem the tide? Could Carroll? No. he is a wizard at basketball, but he would not be equal to the task. Could Hickman? Hardly. Could Bradford? It was doubtful. And so the hour for the game approached, while the sky became overcast and the wind soughed wistfully through the stand and the bleachers. But Bradford placed his name in the hall of fame at Washington College in letters large and indelible, for he not only upset the dope, kept the strong U. of P. team helpless throughout nine innings of basball, and won the contest, but he also made possible the making of history at the institution and placing the athletic standard of the College upon a higher and broader plain.

When Dewey shattered the Spanish armada at Manilla, and broke their tyrannical hold upon the Philippines, his time-honored message, "There is glory enough for all," resounded throughout America. And so while Bradford (like Dewey) richly deserves a great amount of the credit for Tuesday's game, we repeat, "there is glory enough for all." There is glory enough for Johnston, who made the prettiest and best catch of the year at third; there is glory enough for Flowers, who hit a homer with two on, into the right field bleachers, and played at short like a professional; there is glory enough for Jones, who caught Bradford so well; there is glory enough for Moffett, who made three hits and accepted a half dozen chances at second without an error; there is glory enough for Dumschott, who hit timely twice and caught several high flies, which, had he missed, might have proved disastrous; in fact, there is, glory enough for Duffy, the sterling center fielder, Capt. Bounds, in left, and "smiling" Jack Carrol on first. We repeat, "there is glory enough for all."

Throughout the season Capt. Kibler's team, composed of good material, has played in a sort of meteoric fashion, defeating St. John's and the University of Delaware, and showing poor form against ordinary aggregations. But on this occasion they rose to the very peak of condition and showed the best form of the year, both at bat and in the field.

Washington jumped into the lead in the third inning, when hits by Dumschott and Johnson, a base on balls, and Flowers' home run netted four runs. They increased their lead in following inning when Dumschott drove in Bradford with a timely drive. On the other hand Penn was unable to tally until the seventh, which they repeated in the eighth.

Rohrer began the game for Penn, but retired in the third. The fielding of both teams was excellent, only two errors being made. Goldblatt's batting featured for Penn.

The score was as follows:

It's Hard To Beat Old Washing-ton!

(With respects to Grantland Rice)

You can hold the mighty nations in the hollows of your hands,
You can lead to war and glory all their steel-incrusted bands,
You can reach far heights of triumph where the victor only stands—
But you can't always beat old Washing-ton!

You can write with pens of magic as you build enduring tomes,
Through the sweeps of errie fancy where imagination roams,
You can hold your thoughts in harness as they turn out magic pomes—
But you can't always beat old Washing-ton!

Here's a doctor, lawyer, merchant, with a statesman and a priest,
Picked from ocean back to ocean, north and south and west and east,
You can bend their wills to duty and of reason make a feast—
But you can't always win from Washing-ton!

There she sits in queenly fashion on a tufted belt of grass,
On a sandy knob uplifted as the vagrant June winds pass,
And it seems to murmur, "I am waiting," "I am waiting," but alas!—
You can't always beat old Washing-ton!

Gordy, former W. C. twirler, is now playing with Norfolk, Va., having been sold to that club by Newark.

W. C. plays the Alumni this afternoon on the W. C. field, while on Monday they play the St. Paul A. A., of Wilmington.

Fishing is now exceptionally good on Chester river bridge. A great many big hard heads and catfish have been caught this week, while on Tuesday night Capt. W. C. A. Thompson caught a big rock.

Johnson, Flowers, Duffy and Wright, of this year's W. C. team, are playing with Cambridge, while Bill Bounds is playing with Laurel. Bunting, former W. C. player, is also with Cambridge, Brown, well-known Centreville fielder, is with the same team.

Mr. J. C. Carroll, one of our well-known lovers of hunting and dogs, has purchased a Gladstone setter from parties in Indiana. The dog is said to have come from noble parentage.

Dempsey says he had rather fight than eat, says a report. Perhaps he would—for $400,000 or $500,000 a fight. Once the fragrant odor of kale drifts in through the window, business overshadows sport and once the rugged caveman type has found the soft ways of luxurious life, the grind and drudgery of training no longer have their lure.

The Eastern Shore League season opened last Friday and the Eastern Shore teams are now in a hot race for the flag.
