THE

THE COMING FENCE.

The wooden age is past,
The old rails are rotting fast,
To replace them with the same I know will never pay.
Barbed wire is also doomed,
Wire and picket has been boomed,
But the Coiled Spring Fence, it has surely come to stay.

Other fences there will be,
But no one can fail to see
That against THIS they stand no show to win the day.
They lack the essential thing,
The self-regulating spring,
Which defeats contraction and expansion in a scientific way.

You will hear their busy hum,
As the patent right men come
Offering "rights" at bankrupt prices as they "must be sold to-day."
They may be without guile,
But just greet them with a smile,
And "the man who takes no paper lives just across the way."

They will sell him AIR and SKY,
And the exclusive right to buy
Wire and tools to fence his farm, and, the labor "is but play."
They will furnish him a ratchet,
Or something else to match it,
To be loosened in October and tightened up in May.

The unsophisticated neighbor
Puts in days of arduous labor,
Which the guileless patent right man designated "play."
And his fence has cost him double,
If you count in all the trouble,
And is not safe without a man to watch it night and day.

You may thank your stars and Page,
That in this enlightened age,
You are not doomed to build your fences in the antiquated way.
And barbed wire's cruel action,
With expansion and contraction,
By the famous Coiled Spring fence is surely done away.

James Orr, Margaret K. Orr, vs.
David James Smyth, Sarah Smyth, Samuel Orr, Jr., Maria Orr, Mary E. Twaddell, James Twaddell, Jane Leitch, Malcom Leitch, Benjamin Orr, Isabella Orr, Lawrence Orr, William James Orr, Mamie Orr.

In the Circuit Court for Kent County, in Equity.

THE object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate situated in Kent county, Maryland, and the distribution of the proceeds of sale among the persons entitled to the same.

The bill states that by an order of this court passed on the 27th day of April, 1893, leave was granted to the complainants in this cause to file an amended bill of complaint, the object of which was to suggest the death of Lawrence Orr, one of the defendants named in their original bill of complaint, and to make Lawrence Orr, William James Orr and Mamie Orr, children and heirs at law of the said Lawrence Orr, defendants in the cause, which amended bill charges all the matters and things alleged in said original bill of complaint.

The bill states that John Smyth, late of the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, deceased, was, in his lifetime, and at the time of his death, seized in fee simple of certain real estate, consisting of a farm of 115 acres of land, more or less, lying in the First Election District of Kent county, Maryland, on the road leading from Crumpton to Millington, which he purchased in his lifetime of George Vickers, trustee for the sale of the real estate of Richard Embry, deceased. That being so seized the said John Smyth departed this life in the year 1875, without leaving a widow surviving him, and leaving the following heirs at law: David Smyth and Ellen Orr; that David Smyth has since departed this life leaving the said David James Smyth, his only son and heir at law, and Sarah Smyth, his widow, and the said David Smyth likewise left a paper which it is pretended, was his last will and testament, devising all of his real estate to the said David James Smyth subject to the dower of the said Ellen Smyth, which said will was offered for probate in the office of the register of wills in the city of Philadelphia, but a caveat was filed thereto, which caveat has never as yet been disposed of, and the said Ellen Orr hath also died intestate during the lifetime of her father, John Smyth, and the said Ellen Orr left her husband, Samuel Orr, surviving her, and the following children and heirs at law: Samuel Orr, Jr., who intermarried with Maria Kendig, now Maria Orr; Mary E. Twaddell, who intermarried with James Twaddell; John Orr, your orator, James Orr, Jane Leitch, the wife of Malcom Leitch, Benjamin Orr, who intermarried with Isabella McNutt, now Isabella Orr, and Lawrence Orr, who has since departed this life, leaving the following children and heirs at law, namely: the said Lawrence Orr, William James Orr and Mamie Orr, both of whom are infants under the age of twenty-one years, and all the children or grandchildren of the said Ellen Orr by the said Samuel Orr, Sr. All the said parties in interest are of full age, except David James Smyth, Lawrence Orr, William James Orr and Mamie Orr, who are infants under twenty-one years of age.

That James Orr, Margaret K. Orr, John Orr and Samuel Orr, Sr., reside in Kent county, Maryland; David James Smyth, Sarah Smyth, Samuel Orr, Jr., Maria Orr, Mary E. Twaddell, James Twaddell, Jane Leitch, Malcom Leitch, Benjamin Orr, Isabella Orr, Lawrence Orr, William James Orr and Mamie Orr reside in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania. The bill further states that a partition of the said property among the parties entitled thereto, according to the several interests therein as aforesaid, cannot be made without material loss and injury to the parties entitled, except by sale of the said real estate and a division of the proceeds of such sale among the parties entitled thereto according to their respective interests.

It is thereupon ordered this 3d day of May, 1893, that the complainants by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Kent county, Maryland, once in each of four successive weeks before the 3d day of June next, give notice to the said Lawrence Orr, William James Orr and Mamie Orr and all other non-resident defendants of the object and substance of this bill, and warn them to appear in this court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 25th day of June next, to answer the premises and show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to pass as prayed.

AN OLD SAILOR'S YARN

A STORY OF HARDSHIP AND DEATH IN THE ANTARCTIC OCEAN.

A Boat Crew of Seven Men Left on an Island and Not Called For—Six of the Unfortunates Finally Lost Their Lives. Some Idea of the Place.

Captain Eldridge, of the steamer Catharine Whiting, is one of those breezy, old time tars who used to start off from some New England port in a sailing vessel which would return only after a voyage of two or three years. During those lengthy and tempestuous buffetings with the sea Captain Eldridge saw much that was of interest. Some of this he has told with a quaint marine candor worthy of being exactly reproduced. He says:

I saw in The World where three men were left on an island in the Arctic. This reminds me of a boat crew that was left on an island in the Antarctic ocean in 1871 by the schooner Franklin, of New London, Captain James Holmes, master. They were landed on Cape Sheriff to kill what seals they could while the schooner went on a prospecting voyage—that is to say, looking for rookeries or places where seals travel up on the beach to rear their young.

Well, they were to stay there until the schooner returned, which would be in ten days at most. So ten days' provisions were given them, and when ten days had expired the men did not know but the vessel was lost. So they took in their boat the carcasses of seals and started for Potter's cove, 250 miles away, where they expected to find the bark Nile, for it was expected she would sail on the 15th day of March for New London. They arrived there on the 14th, and she had sailed on the 13th, as it appeared. Now what were they to do without clothes or fuel, no provisions or shelter, and a very, cold winter of nine long, dark months? As it is so far south the summer is short—say three months, and winter nine months—and summer is as cold as our winter here, but has the advantage of being all day, while the winter is all night. They were in 63 degs. latitude, south.

Well, the season was so far gone that the few seals, or elephants, or other animals that inhabit this part of the globe had gone into the sea for winter. But, however, they did manage to get a few seals and elephants and secured their oil, and on this they lived until spring. For a shelter they got an old try works which had been left there by some ship and covered this with snow to keep out what cold possible, and with snow for blankets they lived the winter through.

In the spring they concluded to go back to Cape Sheriff and kill all the seals they could before the vessels began to arrive. Then they would make some bargain to take home the skins. So, without any provisions, they started back, but on going out the straits they got jammed in the ice and had to go back over the ice to Porter's cove. They would haul their boat from one cake or block of ice to another, and launch when necessary. Well, they got back at last where they started from nearly dead from cold and exposure.

But, however, another trial. Four refused to go, but three of them took another boat which had been left by some other ship and started again without any food, for there was none to be got at so early in the spring. Nevertheless they arrived then at Cape Sheriff. Afterward they killed 2,200 seals and spread their skins on the snow to keep them from heating, but what became of them will never be known. It was supposed that they undertook to cross the straits, but could not manage the boat. However, they were lost. Now about those four that stayed at the Cove—I remember two of their names, but have forgotten the others. One was an Indian from Long Island, some place near Montauk—his last name was Garby—and one by the name of James King, who was eventually the only survivor of the seven, and his tale of suffering was terrible. He had to kill and eat the other three men. They were nothing but skin and bones anyway, and he could not have survived more than one day more had we not found him as we did.

We buried the remains of the others in the snow. King then went on board of the bark Nile, and from her he went on board of the schooner Z. P. Simons and came to New London, where he sailed from. He sued the company, but finally he gave it up and cleared out—no one knows where.

Now, I will give you all the information I can as to why they were left there. It was late in the season and the winds would not permit of the schooner getting back to them. So she sailed for home. What are seven men's lives to some men?

Now, I will give you some idea of the place. It is in from 61 to 63 degs. south latitude and the land is of volcanic origin, sprung up out of blue water and hiding in the clouds with thousands of feet of snow on top. The rocks are of soapstone appearance. There is not the first sign of vegetation on them—not even moss will grow on the rocks.

Yes, there is a sign of vegetation; what is known as crimson snow. But if you take a handful and look at it without the aid of a microscope you will see nothing but a little red on the snow, but with the aid of a microscope you can see the fine roots in the snow. So it is a vegetable.

There are no shellfish on the rocks—it is perfect desolation. But in the summer the birds of all kinds—that is, birds of high latitude—are here to breed their young. There are the sea hen, the Mother Cary's chicken, which is found all over the world, and penguin, several species of them. And to see these penguin as the march from their nests to the sea and back in single file and stand so erect! They do not fly. They have just merely a small fin to swim with while in the water. They just make a hole in the snow, lay two eggs and sit on them as any bird, right in the snow. But nature provides a way out of all these scrapes, as it were. Their eggs are a good substitute for hen's eggs.—New York World.

THE KRUPP OF ESSEN.

Something About a Town Built Up by a Kind Hearted Capitalist.

The last number of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science gives an admirable summary of the work done at the Krupp foundries for the men employed there and their families. The writer, says the Philadelphia Ledger, Mr. S. M. Lindsay, furnishes an object lesson that may well be commended to employers of labor in this country. The Krupp works employ 16,000 men, and with their families, numbering over 50,000, constituting the bulk of the population of the town of Essen, while over 3,000 are located at various branch works, and the total number benefited by their numerous charitable and philanthropic enterprises is estimated at 25,200 workmen, and with their families 87,900 persons.

The Krupp works were started in a very humble way in 1810, and it was not until the fifties that cast steel, their special product, attained such universal use and the works began their rapid growth and steady increase. The Krupps themselves say that their numerous institutions for their workmen and their families are based first on their own business interests. Would there were more such employers whose selfishness took the same direction!

Their successful efforts to raise the condition of their workmen have been made in various ways—the building of dwellings rented at fair rates and sold on easy terms; co-operative stores; accommodations for boarding and lodging unmarried workmen; their treatment in sickness and the prevention of disease; insurance against accident and sickness and pension funds, in anticipation and largely in excess of the severe requirements of recent German legislation on the subject; savings banks, common and industrial schools, the education of apprentices, the training of young girls in housekeeping, humanitarian rules in factory work, liberal help for religious teaching and charity.

The Krupps have built over 4,000 houses—from frame dwellings of two rooms, renting at fifteen dollars a year, up to six room houses, renting at eighty dollars a year. They have expended over $3,000,000 on them, earning about 2 per cent on the investment, but this, with much more, has been spent in benefiting the working classes in other ways.

The co-operative stores managed by the Krupps at their own risk include fifteen retail grocery stores, nine branch stores, with one main store for general merchandise, a shoe factory with three stores, a hardware store, a mill and bakery with six bread stores, a slaughter house with seven retail meat stores, two clothing establishments, seven restaurants, a wine store, an ice company, a coffee house, a brush factory, a laundry, a weekly market for fresh vegetables, a coffee roasting establishment—in them nearly 500 persons were employed, widows, or daughters of workmen.

There is a boarding house for the unmarried workmen, where lodging and food are supplied at twenty cents a day. In 1870 Alfred Krupp built a hospital for sick and wounded soldiers, and since the Franco-German war it has been used for their workmen and their families—they are cared for at the price of thirty-eight cents a day for men, thirty cents a day for women and twenty-five cents for children. There is a large bathing establishment, where 6,000 free baths were given last year, and bath tickets are sold for 2½ cents apiece. The insurance funds against accident and death and for pensions have been largely supplemented by the Krupps in addition to the strict requirements of the German laws. Primary and advanced and technical schools are maintained, and the churches of all denominations are largely supported by the Krupps.

She Fought a Burglar.

A bold attempt at robbery was frustrated by the bravery of Mrs. A. H. Chapman, wife of the agent of the United States and Pacific Express companies in Pueblo, Colo. Shortly after dark, but before her husband had returned from his office, Mrs. Chapman had occasion to go into the kitchen, when she was startled to see a man standing in the middle of the floor, and upon asking what he wanted he replied, "Those earrings," pointing to a pair of very valuable solitaire diamonds which the lady wore. She fled to another room and armed herself with a revolver, but the fellow not following her she again ventured into the kitchen.

He pounced upon her from the pantry, where he had hidden, and a hand to hand struggle ensued, in which she repeatedly struck him over the head with the revolver, it unfortunately not being loaded. A well directed blow from his fist laid her upon the floor senseless, but when she recovered she was alone and her valuables undisturbed, the marauder having evidently been frightened away by her screams.—Cor. Dressmaking For Pet Dogs.

A new industry has lately been developed in Paris—that of dog's dressmaking. A clever woman has started an establishment whose handsome waiting room is provided with soft rugs for the 4-footed patrons, as well as divans for their mistresses, and here she takes orders for the coats and blankets which Dot and Tiny and Joy must have to protect their tender frames from the blasts of winter.

The venture has already proved successful and may lead in time to the starting of a dog fashion publication, although it cannot be said that the want of this has been keenly felt.—New York Times.

Regularly Appointed.

Miss Marguerite Hume is deputy recorder of West Bay City, Mich. At a recent meeting of the common council, when the recorder was out of the city, she acted in his place. Some of the aldermen feared that this would invalidate the proceedings, and there was a little breeze, but on the discovery that Miss Hume was a regularly appointed officer and had taken the oath all objections were withdrawn.—Woman's Journal.

He Knew Its Worth.

Dr. M. J. Davis is a prominent physician of Lewis. Cass county, Iowa, and has been actively engaged in the practice of medicine at that place for the past thirty-five years. On the 26th of May, while in Des Moines, en route to Chicago, he was suddenly taken with an attack of diarrhœa. Having sold Chamberlain's Cholera, Colic and Diarrhœa Remedy for the past seventeen years, and knowing its reliability, he procured a 25 cent bottle, two doses of which completely cured him. The excitement and change of diet incident to traveling often produce a diarrhœa. Every bottle of this Remedy before leaving home. For sale by M. A. Toulson, Chestertown, Md.; J. P. Ireland, Galena, Md.; Dr. N. Comegys, Millington, Md.

IN ENGLAND there is an organization known as the Rural District Nursing Association. The nurses are in training two years at a cost of $250. Each nurse has a salary of $125 to $150, with board and lodging, and a donkey cart in which to go the rounds of a district of 2000 to 3000 inhabitants.
