TROLLEY CAR ITS OWN POWER-HOUSE

New Idea in Electric Traffic to Revolutionize Old Systems of Propulsion.

A new idea in trolley electric propulsion in the way of a car that eliminates the present power-house, the over-head trolley, the third rail system and the storage battery was due to reach New York last week. It is claimed for the vehicle that it can maintain a steady speed of fifty-eight miles an hour and can keep it up all day and night. The car is known in the electrical world as the Strang electric railway car.

Lars G. Nilson, a Western man, invented the system, which briefly described consists of a gas engine with direct connection to a dynamo, and which generates its own electricity to run its wheels. A test car was recently turned out at Philadelphia by the J. G. Brill Company to test the new idea. It has been quietly running on the Ladenburg branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad system for several weeks and there made its record of fifty-eight miles an hour.

Nilson's patents were secured by Wm. B. Strang, of No. 15 Wall street, New York, who was interested in South-western Kansas. He controls a twenty-mile trolley car line there, known as the Missouri and Kansas Interurban Railway Company, which runs over the Santa Fe trail from Kansas City to Olathe, Kan.

Not wishing to put in power-houses, overhead wires and the usual plant of a trolley line, Strang developed the idea of Nilson, and is confident that he has power-house, overhead wires, third rail system and storage battery system all combined in the car, the "Ogerita," which he had built and equipped with the new system.

The gas engine in the car is situated forward. It is of special design, and is about 80-horse power. It is of the four-cycle type, and has six 8 by 10 cylinders. To secure a short crank shaft and reduce vibrations to the minimum the cylinders are partially opened, three on each side, and are set at an angle of 90 degrees to each other. The weight of the engine is reduced by using aluminum as far as possible.

The vaporizer is arranged to work with the utmost economy with all kinds of loads. Kerosene, alcohol or crude oil may be used instead of gasoline with a slight change of adjustment of the vaporizer. The gasoline is stored in safety tanks beneath the car floor. The cells of a storage battery are placed in a cradle underneath the car, so that when the car is at rest the engine can still be running, and can charge the storage battery all the time, and when running the car has the benefit of the work of the dynamo, and of the storage battery as well if grades are heavy, so that enough "juice" is always on hand to run the steepest grades and do so at the highes rate of speed.

Transmission of Power.

Power is usually transmitted from the engine to the driving wheels by means of direct electrical connection between the dynamo and controlers and motors. For running on a level track under ordinary conditions the current goes, as has been said, direct to the motors from the generators, but when coasting down grade, slowing up or standing still, the surplus of current is taken up by the batteries, and gives a reserve power that is always ready.

The average gasoline consumption is 45-100 gallons per car per mile. The 100 gallons usually carried gives a run of 225 miles.

The car will come from Philadelphia over the Pennsylvania system and will be at Jersey City over Sunday. It will then be taken by the West Shore Railroad officials, who will test it under its own power to Buffalo. There the Rock Island and the Lake Shore officials will test it and see that it reaches Chicago. Thence it goes to California over the Southern Pacific, for the purpose of giving it a big mileage test.

The car itself is fitted up as handsomely as a parlor car, with drawing-room, smoking compartments and buffet, and is 52 feet 9 inches over the vestibules. The car is mounted on high speed trucks and it is designed to make record runs whenever possible on its Western journey.
