LITERARY NOTES.

MCCLURE'S FOR NOVEMBER.

Perhaps the most timely article in McClure's Magazine for November, is A Woman's Diary of the Seige of Pekin, by Mrs. E. K. Lowry, one of the besieged missionaries in the legations last summer. This vivid narrative by an eye witness of most of the events described is sure to command attention at a time when the eyes of all the world are turned to the Far East. It is in a true sense history from original documents.

Another article that will awaken general interest is that on The First Flight of Count Zeppelin's Air Ship, by Eugen Wolf, the Count's assistant and companion in the trial. Only by such an explanation as is here given, aided by the accompanying photograps showing the design of the ship and its appearance in full flight, can Count Zeppelin's marvel of construction and achievement be appreciated.

Interesting, suggestive, helpful—that must be the verdict upon William Allen White's Character Sketch of Hanna. To a vast majority of most intelligent readers, Senator Hanna was unknown until the campaign of 1896, and is still but vaguely understood either as a politician or as a man. To those who wish to understand this great political leader Mr. White's illuminating article will be especially welcome at the present period of political excitement.

The fiction in this number is of the usual high standard. A Temperance Campaign, by G. K. Turner describes how a couple of clever schemers played off the temperance people against the liquor dealers, to the advantage of the schemers. Confusion of Goods, by Frederick Carrol Baldy is a football story, and a good exciting story too.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE FOR NOVEMBER

The great Trans-Siberian Railway, described by Henry Norman in his series on "Russia of To day," leads the November number of Scribner's Magazine. This railway is the commercial and political key to the Far East and Mr. Norman travelled its entire length so far as completed, to Lake Baikal and beyond. He describes the wonderful industrial possibilities of the country through which he passed and gives an entirely new idea of Siberia. Instead of a desert it promises to be the leading wheat-producing country of the world, and the railway opens up immense mineral possibilities. Mr. Norman says that since the great wall of China the world has seen no one material undertaking of equal magnitude. The cost of this railway will be about $500,000,000, and its total length 5,486 miles. Illustrated throughout with the author's photograps.

Jesse Lynch Williams who has written a number of articles on the picturesque aspects of New York, in this number describes the "Cross-streets of New York." These views, which are so little noticed by the pedestrian, are among the most impressive in the city, and Mr. Williams points them out with rare discrimination, and mingles with the New York of today a great deal of its romantic past. It is fully illustrated with original sketches and drawings by many of the best illustrators, McCarter, Linson, Shipley, Guerin, Glackens, and others.

Mrs. Fudge——For shame, Henry! That's our Lucy rehearing her graduating speech."—Ohio Journal.

"You look robust," remarked the lady of the house. "Are you equal to the task of sawing wood?"

"Equal isn't the word, madam," replied the pilgrim as he resumed his journey; "I'm superior to it."—Philadelphia Record.
