That old copybook maxim finds its most forceful application in the waste of vitality, which is called "burning the candle at both ends." A woman is often tempted beyond her strength by domestic or social demands. Some day she awakens from this waste of strength to the woeful want of it. She has become weak, nervous and miserable.

For weak, nervous, run-down women, there is no better tonic and nervine than Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It restores the appetite, quiets the nerves and gives refreshing sleep. It cures local diseases peculiarly womanly which undermine the general health. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

"No doubt you have forgotten me, but after you read my letter you will remember me," writes Mrs. Annie E. Moring, of 238 7th Avenue, S. W., Roanoke, Va. "In the year 1897, I wrote to you for advice, which you gave me free of charge. When I wrote to you I was a wreck; I could not walk straight for pains in my abdomen; could not sit down, lie down, or get any ease at all. I had what was called the best doctor here, but did not get any better until I went through a course of your medicine. I took eight bottles each of 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and ten bottles of the 'Pleasant Pellets.' I tell you the medicine made a cure of me."

Weak and sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. All correspondence is held as strictly private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

THE GOOD DIRT ROAD.

It Cannot Exist Where Surface and Subsurface Drainage Are Not Complete.

The first and most important essential for a good dirt road is thorough drainage. Drainage to be thorough must take off not only the surface water but also the sub-surface moisture.

To have a dry and solid surface on a dirt road there must be beneath the surface a subsoil that is not saturated with water. No matter how well the roadbed be graded up, unless ample provision s made for thoroughly and speedily draining out the subsurface moisture the road will become "muddy" after every heavy rain—if the rains continue such roads become impassible.

While open ditches at the side of the road will carry off the surface water they will not drain the road speedily enough to prevent mud and preclude sponginess, the condition so wearying to draft animals and detrimental to heavy hauling.

To afford quick and effective drainage a line of six inch tile should be laid in the centre of the road below the reach of frost.

In the level land where the soil is loose and porous such a tile so laid in a graded roadbed would drain a track 40 feet wide. As open side ditches, constructed so as to give a continuous and unobstructed flow of water, will not only carry off the surface water but also aid in draining off subsurface moisture the addition of the six-inch tile as here suggested will speedily and thoroughly drain the roadbed.

The distance which such a tile drain can be run without outlet will depend upon the lay and character of the land varying from 30 to 60 rods. In very flat land, where not convenient to obtain frequent outlets, two six-inch tiles may be laid side and side of each other, which will permit a longer distance between outlets; but the outlets should be sufficiently numerous to rapidly drain out all subsurface water.

A roadbed cannot be thoroughly drained when the side ditches are so small that the water stands in pools or sink holes and only escapes by absorption or evaporation.

When surface and subsurface drainage are complete, good dirt roads may be had. Where they are not good it is impossible to have good dirt roads.—Farmer's Voice.

LESSON LOST ON A SHIFTLESS FAMILY.

"One of the oddest characters I ever met while engaged in charitable work," said the secretary to an aid society, "was a certain Mr.—well, Jones will answer, although that was not his name. In the small town where I lived there was a shiftless family, sadly in need of help, and I took it upon myself to see that they were furnished many things that they needed in the way of household supplies.

"Among those that I approached for help was Mr. Jones, who was probably the richest man in the town. He thought the matter over a few minutes, and then announced that he would give something. The next day when I went around with a wagon to collect the supplies that I had been promised I was provoked, and somewhat amused as well, when Mr. Jones handed me a cake of soap as his contribution. Now I will admit that the family I was trying to help was greatly in need of this necessary article of the toilet, but I had hoped that Mr. Jones would do better; besides, I had grave doubts that the recipients would appreciate the gift.

"It ran along for sometime, and matters went from bad to worse with the family I had helped. Something had to be done for them, and thinking that a personal visit might soften Mr. Jones' heart I invited him to visit the family with me and see the abject poverty they were in. He consented, and we started at once for their hovel. The family, which consisted of a shiftless husband, his wife, who was not much better, and five small children, occupied a single room, and when I got Mr. Jones inside I considered that I had made a 10-strike and that now he certainly would do something substantial in the way of help. I noticed that his eyes were wandering around the room, apparently taking in every detail, and suddenly he pounced upon something and held it up to my gaze. It was the cake of soap that he had contributed, without one sign of having been used. Taking out his knife, he cut the cake in two, dug out a $10 gold piece that was in the centre, put it in his pocket and walked out without saying a word.

"It certainly was a good lesson on the value of using soap, but I fear it was lost upon the shiftless family, for I never noticed any change for the better in their personal appearance."

The Giraffe.

The children had written compositions on the giraffe. They were reading them to the class. At last the time came for little Willie to read his. It was as follows: "The giraffe is a dumb animal and cannot express itself by any sound because its neck is so long its voice gets tired on its way to its mouth."
