Young Plants

Every farmer knows that some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same and seed may seem the same but some plants are weak and others strong.

And that's the way with children. They are like young plants. Same food, same home, same care but some grow big and strong while others stay small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion offers an easy way out of the difficulty. Child weakness often means starvation, not because of lack of food, but because the food does not feed.

Scott's Emulsion really feeds and gives the child growing strength.

Whatever the cause of weakness and failure to grow—Scott's Emulsion seems to find it and set the matter right.

LITERARY NOTES.

The April "Cosmopolitan" is strong in its distinguishing features—illustrated articles of timely interest and intertaining fiction. In the leading article, John Brisben Walker, the editor, discusses that question of momentous importance, "If Europe Should Go to War." Mr. Walker has analized the present unstable condition of European politics with searching thoroughness, and his conclusions are full of unusual and startling possibilities. An eminent French Catholic author has written so frankly upon the need of reform within the church, in "Pius X. and the Problems of His Pontificate," that he conceals his identity under the pen-name of "Altavita." Broughton Brandenburg contributes a beautifully illustrated descriptive article on Gibralter and the life to be encountered there, under the title of "The Keeper of the Eastern Gate." The Russo-Japanese difficulties are not forgotten. Edwin Wildman, former United States consul at Hong Kong, describes "The Court of a Twentieth-Century Mikado, and there is also a series of illustrations of Russian army types.

The fiction, besides the continuation of that modern "Gulliver's Travels," Mr. Well's "Food of the Gods," includes two splendid stories: "The Snare of the Fowler," by David Felsburg, and "The Green Row," by William Hamilton Osborne. The letter is of special intesest to business men.

Mrs. Richard Mansfield will delight all theater-goers with her clever paper on "Audiences." Other contributors are Cyrus Townsend Brady—with "Panama and the Knights-Errant of Colonization" in the "Dramatic History of South America" series; Murat Halstead treats us from his well-stored memory to "Some Breakfasts with Horace Greeley," and William R. Stewart has a brief advance notice of the Lewis and Clark Exposition to be held at Portland, Oregon, next year. The illustrations throughout this number are as profuse and beautiful as usual.

MCCLURE'S FOR APRIL.

McClure's for April is fairly stunnig in its effect. The first of a series of articles on "The Enemies of the Republic," by Lincoln Steffens, which will consider the mirgoverment of states, takes up Missouri and gives the reader a shock he will not soon forget. It is almost paralyzing in its relentless array of fact and logic concerning corruption as a custom, a system, a revolution in government. It is the bripe-giver, not the brige-taker, who is really responsible for the bad government, Mr. Steffens points out. The successful business man, the captain of industry is the man to catch, and Mr. Steffens proceeds to catch him In graphic, fearless words he tells the story of corruption's work and rule of Missouri, of the barter of public interest to the great trusts by the people's servants, of the big business men who buy and the politicians who sell a people's right, their is very government itself. Mr. Steffens' article is more than startling, it is staggering in its frank uncovering of the plain but alarming truth.

Ida M. Tarbell follows close with an account of the alleged "Breaking up of the Trust" in her "History of the Standard Oil Company." She gives the results of legislative investigations and court proceedings against the Company which forced it in to publicity and reorganization. John D. Rockfeller's testimony in these cases is described in such a manner as to present clearly his limitations both in ethics and humor. Miss Tardell simply quotes Mr. Rockefeller. His own words fix and define him. As usual, Miss Tarbell deals only with the facts. They tell their own story and shape their own conclusion.

Thomas Nelson Page goes right to the heart of the Negro Problem and uncovers some of its "Difficulties and Fallacies" in his second paper on that subject. With intimate knowledge and clear insight he shows where both North and South made mistakes in their treatment of the problem. He describes the changed relations between the two races in the South due to these mistakes, born largely of the ignorance of each section of the condition and temper of the other. Mr. Page sweeps away both the vain theories of the doctrinaire and the narrow prejudices of the provincial with one free, strong stroke.

The April number of the "Twentieth Century Home" is quite up to the standark set by the first two numbers. From a long list of contributors we gather the names of Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Clara Morris, Heinrich Conried, Hezekiah Butterworth, Garrett R. Serviss, Harry Thurston Peck, the late Surgeon-General William A. Hammond, Tom Masson and Theodosia Garrison. The articles one and all are planned for women who have serious interest in life. They cover many branches of effort in which women have a part. The illustrations are unsually numerous and beautiful.
