CHRONICLE.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.

SATURDAY MORNING, Sept. 16th. 1837.

☞The Orphans court of this county, will sit on Monday 18th September.

The message of the President which we publish to day, is nothing more than a reiteration of the views heretofore expressed of Blair and Benton. The first idea that arises in the mind after its perusal is, why did the President call Congress together? This country is in the greatest distress, arising from a disordered currency, ruin and bankruptcy are threatening the commercial portion of the community; the energies of trade are completely paralized, the laboring class of people in our cities are out of employment. The people call aloud for a remedy. The President issues a proclamation for a convocation of Congress, curiosity is on tiptoe to hear the recommendation of the President's, not an idle curiosity to know the sentiments of a man upon a particular subject, but an all absorbing anxiety to know, whether or not, the President of the nation will recommend measures which will smooth the troubled waves of distress, allay the excited feelings of the people, and restore regularity to the operations of trade and commerce. But the mind is filled with disappointment at the first sentence of the message. The object alleged by the President for calling together the representatives of the people at an extra session and thus imposing a heavy expense upon the nation, is not to afford relief to the sufferings of the people, but to obviate the conveniences which resulted to the government, from the suspension of specie payment by the banks entrusted with the safe keeping and deposite of the public money. The message recommends an entire separation of the government from all banks and banking, and that certain officers of government shall become sub-treasurers or depositories of the public funds. This "experiment" is to bring the purse of the nation, rather nearer the executive hands, than the last "experiment" of State Banks. The author of the message, not long since, took great pains to convince the people that the State Banks would afford a good and safe fiscal agency in the operations of government— hear his own language:

"I sincerely believe that the PUBLIC FUNDS can be as safely and conveniently transmitted from one poriion of the the Union to another,—that domestic exchanges can be as successfully and cheaply effected, and the currency at least as sound under the EXISTING SYSTEM OF STATE BANKS, as these objects could be accomplished by a national bank, and would not seek a remedy for the evils to which you allude, should they unfortunately occur, by a national bank, even if the constitutional objections were not in the way."

He now acknowledges in his message, that this experiment has failed, and tries to convince the people, that the "experiment" which he now proposes to try is much better than the last "experiment," what a pity he did not try the best one first. But the people say, what was the the use of all these schemes and experiments, when the currency was sound, and every branch of industry prosperous?—Why abandon a system which had been tried and proved to answer well the purposes, for which it was intended, and resort to the wide field of experiment in hopes of finding a system that would answer as well?

After having gone through all the scourges inflicted by this currency-tampering prosperity of our rulers, after all the distress, bankruptcy and ruin which followed from their measures, the people would feel quite happy, if they could be permitted to return to their former state, and enjoy the benefits arising from a sound and well regulated currency—benefits which can be secured only through the instrumentality of a National Bank.

The last effusion of "Justice," in the Aurora, is too silly to require notice from us.

REFORM.—In answer to the Aurora, we state that we are in favor of the Reform Bills of last session. There are items in those bills, which we originally opposed, and which we still think are of doubtful expediency, but as those bills must pass the next session, without any alteration or amendment, or not pass at all, we think it better to pass them in their present form, than to have the passions and jealousies of the people from the different portions of the state again excited on this subject.

The 'Aurora' asks us, would we not have advocated Mr. Hubbard, had the Bucktown Convention nominated him? We answer unequivocally that we would. But believing that conventions are necessary in every party, nothing could induce us to support a man, who would come out in opposition to them. We believe the true principle upon which every party man should act, to be this—Whenever we see a candidate professing to be of our party, but supported zealously by the other party, and but very partially by our own, we should not touch him. The opposite party have some motive in supporting him, and by giving him our vote we assist in promoting their views, and our principles and theirs being antipodes, we assist in overthrowing our own party.

To the Voters of Dorchester County.

IN presenting myself a second time, as a Candidate, circumstances would seem to suggest at least, a word of explanation. A simple statement of facts then may be sufficient for this purpose.

The Bucktown Convention, to whose consideration alone, I submitted my pretensions, having failed to form a full ticket, an inconsiderable number of men once delegates to that Convention—in fact a small minority, have re-assembled in Cambridge, and assumed to themselves the powers of that Convention, by filling the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Wm. Harrison. Not acknowledging then, fellow-citizens, that there is any Whig ticket properly nominated by you or your representatives, and being firmly opposed to that odious caucus system, which unlike a properly constituted Convention in which the voice of every man may be heard either in person, or by his representative, has ever a tendency to blind the people and disregard their sentiments, I feel bound to yield to the solicitation of many, in re-announcing myself as an INDEPENDENT WHIG CANDIDATE, for a seat in the next Legislature of Maryland.
