From the Baltimore Chronicle.

NORTH CAROLINA.—We have nothing additional from the election in this State. The three counties heard from have opened the canvass in a highly gratifying manner, and we have no doubt that the conclusion will be equally as satisfactory.

The Fayetteville Observer of Wednesday, after recording the gain of two members in Pitt county, and stating that if the Whigs hold their own in the rest of the State, they will carry a majority in both branches of the Legislature, says: "But we shall not be content with this. We look forward to the election of a decided majority of Whigs to the Legislature. As for poor Mr. Banch, we pity him. Even the county of Edgecombe, which never before refused to swallow any dose prepared for it by the political quacks who have brought the party to the bed of death,—even that county has regarded him with evident nausea, and has but half gulped him down."

The following general order was issued by the Secretary of the Navy, on the receipt of the news of the death of Com. Rogers.

OFFICIAL—GENERAL NAVY ORDER.

As a mark of respect to Com. John Rodgers, late senior officer of the navy of the United States, who died in Philadelphia on the 1st inst. the flags of the navy yards, stations, and vessels of the United States navy, are to be hoisted half-mast, and thirteen minute guns fired at noon on the day after the receipt of this order.

Officers of the navy and marine corps are to wear crape for thirty days.

Navy Department, Aug. 3. 1838.

COMING OVER.—The Cincinnatti Republican which was some time since the leading Loco Foco paper in Ohio, and of late has been advocating the Conservative doctrines, has now come out in thorough opposition to Martin Van Buren.

ANOTHER.—The editor of the Constellation, an Administration paper, at Covington, Indiana, has struck the Van Buren flag, and run up the American Whig banner.

ANOTHER YET.—The Natchitoches Herald, hitherto a Van Buren print, has cast off its Loco Focoism and hoisted the Whig flag. It says, "our penitence for past errors is complete; let the publicity of it be the test of our sincerity."

THE CONDUCTORS OF THE PRESS.—A French writer thus describes the condition of the conductors of the daily press:

'In my opinion, the position of the man at the present day who writes for the public, and upon whom the public bestows its smile, who is the master of his thoughts and of his style, is not a situation so very unfortunate. To speak to the multitude, to tell them every morning what is in his soul or on his heart, to discuss matters of the highest interest whether the writer be a politician or only a writer on general subjects of literature; to mingle and closely too, in all the emotions, all the passions of the day; to protect the conquered, to attack, or what is more difficult, to defend the conqueror; to stand in the breach of all revolutions past present and to come; to listen from above to the vague rumours of the crowd, and to know what they desire even before it is known to themselves; to place one's self at the head and take the lead before the people know they are led; and to form the public opinion of every day, and then be first to discover it; take part in every thing, either of blame or praise, or to advise, whether it be eloquence, science, the theatre, France England, Germany, Europe, or the whole world to give glory and renown to whoever merits them, to keep almost nothing for one's self; to expend on his transient pages more spirit, style, courage and talent than would be necessary to write large books; to be a sort of unknown monarch, a dictator without a name, an inviolable judge, becoming more indulgent as he is more strong, more modest as he is more powerful, more devoted to the support of all the rules which protect society and the fine arts, in proportion as he gains more influence over the mind of the reader,—certainly it is a position admirable, solitary, novel,'

From the Whig.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

The history of Martin Van Buren, from his first entrance into public life until the present time discloses nothing calculated to be an example worthy of imitation by the rising generation; nothing which will entitle his name to go down to posterity as a public benefactor. Passing over the various positions he has been placed in as an opponent, and afterwards an advocate of the late war, as friend and afterwards an enemy of the tariff; as an opponent to universal suffrage, and as a friend to the admission of negroes to the right of voting, we will briefly notice his course in relation to the elevation of president Jackson.

Previous to the election of Mr. Adams, Van Buren was a supporter of Mr. Crawford. The papers under the influence of the Crawford party in New York, and none more so than the Albany Argus, ridiculed the idea of general Jackson possessing any qualification for the presidency. It is natural to suppose that Van Buren concurred in the views of his then party. After Adams was elected, Van Buren wished the appointment under him as minister to England. Had Adams complied with his wishes, he might have been re-elected, but knowing the character of the man, he preferred sending to so important a station, one who would do credit to his country abroad. This disappointment of Van Buren's hopes caused him to form a coalition with a number of prominent men in congress to assist in the elevation of Jackson, and then divide the spoils of office amongst themselves. The cry was, the administration of Adams, though it be as pure as the angels in heaven must be overthrown.—Thus bound together by no principle but the desire of office and power, the coalition went on deceiving the people with alarming cries of national extravagance, and with promises of retrenchment and, reform, until party slander and parts corruption prevailed over the purity and virtue of the officers of government, and a change of administration took place. No sooner was the Jackson party in power than a scramble for office took place, and the principles upon which the party had struggled for power was soon disclosed. Office was found to be the ruling principle. Men were proscribed and ejected from office on account of their political opinions, and their places filled with noisy partizans, unknown to the people for any quality except as active politicians. The leaders of the coalition having thus obtained power began to form schemes for its perpetuation in their hands. Here an obstacle intervened. While they all united in displacing Mr. Adams, they did not agree so cordially who should be the successor of Jackson. An eruption took place and the explosion severed forever the discordant materials of Jackson's first cabinet. The flatteries and intrigues of Van Buren soon for him the favor of the occupant of the White House; and he was to be the successor of the illustrious chief, and follow in his footseps. After exerting all their efforts it was found that Van Buren stood no chance of success, unless he could unite his fortunes with a band of destructives, who united within themselves enemies to the salutary institutions of society, enemies to religion, and advocates of argrarian principles. They were once know in New York as Fanny Right men. The first ticket they started in that city, received one hundred and fifty votes out of thirty thousand. But in time they modified some of their principles that were obnoxious, and smoothed over others that were objectionable, until they number a few thousand. Being very active they made an attempt to carry Tammany Hall in their favor at one of the nomination meetings. Failing in this they made so much confusion at a meeting that a motion was made and carried, to adjourn. The noise was still kept up until the lights were extinguished. The destructives anticipating this, drew forth a number of loco-loco matches, and in an instant the whole hall was illuminated. A fight ensued, the respectable part of the meeting left the house and the destructives remained conquerors, and from that time assumed the name of 'Loco-focos.' This is the party that Van Buren courted. He was compelled to embrace their measures, and the consequence has been, all the evils under which the country has so long suffered.

The Bank of the United States.—Before governor Ritner issued his proclamation compelling the banks to resume specie payments, the Loco Focos spared no effort to make the people believe that the United States Bank was insolvent. This was at a time too, when the wants of the treasury required the sale of the bonds held by the government against the bank, for its stock. We are not aware that the efforts of the loco focos were successful, or that a single person believed that the bank was unable to redeem its notes.

Within a few days past the papers have given information that the government has been selling these selfsame bonds to the agent of the United States bank. This don't look much like insolvency. And insolvent debtor is never guilty of the folly of buying his own debts at par. The Van Buren papers have been absolutely dumbfounded at the intelligence. Not a word against the bank has been spoken by The Globe since the sale of the bonds, and of course not a word has been echoed back from the Baltimore Republican and other papers of that kidney. The intelligence was gall and wormwood to their own words, and acknowledge that the bank is not insolvent after all! A few more cries of insolvency will make the people disregard them altogether. The only insolvent establishment that we know of, is the United States treasury. It receives about twenty millions and expends thirty-eight millions annually.

CURE FOR SUMMER COMPLINT.

Blackberry Syrup.—We are indebted to a friend for the following receipt for making Blackberry Syrup. Thir Syrup is said to be almost specific for the summer complaint. In 1832 it was successful in more than one case of Cholera.—The fruit is now in market, and the present time is the proper time to make it.

BLACKBERRY SYRUP.

To 2 quarts of juice of blackberries add
1 pound loaf sugar.
1-2 oz. nutmegs, 1-2 oz. cin. pulv.
2-4 oz. cloves, 1-6 oz. allspice, do.

Boil all together for a short time, and when cold, add a pint fourth proof brandy.

You will save many bitter tears by publishing the above in your valuable paper. From a teaspoon full to a wine glass, according to the age of the patient, till relieved, it is to be given. It may spoil practice but it will save life.

'Le Tems,' a liberal newspaper, has been re-established in Lower Canada, This is one of the fruits of the conciliatory policy of Lord Durham; a policy which is doing more for the peaceable establishment of the Canadas, than all the troops of England could effect.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGES.—We are pleased to see this subject exciting the attention of the public press throughout the country. The Norfolk Beacon very pertinently asks why the Post office department should be expected to sustain itself any more than those of the State, War, or Treasury, and suggests the propriety of reducing the postage on single letters to such a rate as will enable the laboring man to communicate with another without paving, as now, nearly one fourth of a day's wages as the price of an answer. We concur with the Beacon in the suggestion and hope the matter will be attended to in the proper quarter.—Sun.

OBITUARY.

DIED, June the 22d at the residence of her brother Robert T. Keene Esq. in Caroline county. Mrs. ELIZA ANN, consort of Mr. John Horney, in the 28th year of her age.

Having lately plighted her vows at the Hymenial altar she had assumed the important duties of a wife, and was just about entering into the responsible station of the head of a family, with flattering anticipations in relation to the future; when the withering hand of death suddenly blighted all her hopes, removed her from the society of fond relatives and deprived a devoted husband of the idol of his heart.

She was a zealous and consistent member of the Roman Catholic Church, living in the uniform observance of religion as taught by that church, and in her last moments declared that she loved her Saviour, and expressed willingness to die. Possessing a mind of a superior order, cultivated to a considerable extent, with a disposition of perfect equanimity, she seemed to be invested with an undefinable charm which secured the affections of her associates. On reviewing her character, we were forcibly reminded of Milton's sentiment respecting the adaptation of Man and Woman to their relative station in life when he said.

"For contemplation he and valor form'd;
For softness she and sweet attractive grace;

and we thought that we had never seen one who personated the latter better than did the affectionate and amiable Mrs. Horney.

"She died in beauty—like a rose.
Blown from its parent stem;
She died in beauty—like a pearl
Dropt from some diadem.
She died in beauty—like a lay
Along a moon-lit lake;
She died in beauty—like the song
Of birds amid the brake.
She died in beauty—like the snow
On flowers dissolved away;
She died in beauty—like a star
Lost in the brow of day.
She lives in glory—like night's gems
Set round the silver moon;
She lives in glory—like the sun
Amid the flowers of June." D.
