SHADBAKE AT BETTERTON.

By the Bentztown Bard.

Ten miles of Chesapeake, crossing the bay;
Ten miles of Kentland across the blue way.
Shadbake at Betterton all afternoon,
Deep in the dream of the spring's magic rune.
Shad out of Eden in Eden prepared,
Hot rolls like those that were made when they fared
On golden ambroisa in Helicon's prime,
When lips sang of love and the honey dripped rhyme.

Shadbake at Betterton! Don't make a noise;
This is a sort of a sacrament, boys!
Food on the Chesapeake isn't just eat,
But something artistic and sacred and sweet;
Something quite matchless and magic and rare,
Like Goblets of dew or a breaker of air
When clover has ripened and wheat's on the way
In footsteps of music o'er meadows of May.

Ten miles of Chesapeake—maybe it's more!
Ten miles of Kentland, with naiads on the shore,
And sea nymphs and gods of old legend to guide
Your feet to the table, with youth on your side,
And shad served in glory as no where on earth
'Tis served, with a flavor that turns into mirth
Each mouthful you swallow—your eyes turned above
As to taste baked elation, and beauty and love!

Shadbake at Betterton—ten miles away
Gleams the loved Kentland and sings the blue bay!
Morning has served it, with skies of soft blue,
Songs of cock robin and honey of dew.
Gods on Olympus still wander at night
Where Betterton shadbakes have been, for a bite;
There in the grass searching early and late
For one little crumb some one left on a plate.
