SANDY BOTTOM DEPARTMENT STORE!

PROPERLY PACKED APPLES COMMAND TOP PRICES.

Growers Should Make An Especial Effort To Pack This Year According To Approved Method.

S. B. SHAW,
Maryland Agricultural College Extension Service.

Well-grown, carefully packed apples seldom go begging on any market. As a rule, it is the wormy, diseased, poorly colored fruit, packed in a careless, haphazard manner that has a depressing effect on market prices.

Before beginning to pack, consider the kind of packages best suited to the variety, and for which there is the greatest demand on the market to which you expect to consign. Many growers do not consider the relation which the package bears to the selling value of their fruit. On some markets there is a good demand for fancy Stayman, Grimes, Jonathan and similar varieties packed in boxes, while other markets prefer these same varieties in barrels. Such varieties as Winesap, York, Ben Davis, etc., can best be marketed in barrels on most markets.

Do not attempt to pack more than one grade in boxes. Select the choicest fruit for this package, using that which is entirely free from blemishes of all kinds and of the highest color. Market all other grades in barrels.

In barrel-packing face with the stems to the head. Fruit used for facing should not misrepresent the contents of the barrel, either in size, color or quality. Shake the barrel frequently during the filling to insure a tight pack. Place the top layer stems up, extending about an inch above the ends of the staves. Corrugated paper pads can be used to good advantage at both ends of the barrel. No matter what package is used or the grade packed, have each container filled with the same size and quality of fruit throughout. Mark each package accordingly.

Improved methods of production and packing will make marketing easier and more profitable. The Extension Service of the Maryland Agricultural College is giving detailed information, through demonstrations or otherwise, to growers in Maryland who want to know more about grading and packing apples. If there is an Agricultural Agent in your county, get in touch with him and arrange for a packing demonstration in your community. Where there is no County Agent the Maryland Agricultural College arranges for the holding of such demonstrations at the request of local growers.

SELECTING HEAVY LAYERS FROM YOUR FLOCK.

ROY H. WAITE,
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

It has been rather conclusively proven by experiments and observations at several of the Government Experiment Stations that it is possible to select the heavy laying hens with a remarkable degree of accuracy by rather simple methods. This happens to be about the best time of the year to make the selection. Of course, the method is of use only in selecting the hens to be kept for breeders. Their first year's laying period is over and therefore, the system is of no use in weeding out the drones.

It has been observed that the high layers invariably have much lighter colored shanks than the others. This is explained by the fact that the hen uses up the coloring matter from her body and puts it into the eggs. Of course, if the flock has been fed on highly colored feed, like yellow corn, green grass, etc., the shanks will not be so light colored. The heavy layer, however, will have much paler shanks than the others.

It has also been noted that almost invariably the heavy laying hen is the last to moult in the fall and her feathers nearly all drop out at one time. Such a hen has been tending strictly to business and almost forgot to get her new clothes. More recently it has been observed that the ear lobes of white ear lobed breeds are much less yellow in a heavy laying bird.

It is also pretty definitely known that a hen which lays well into the fall is apt to have been a rather heavy layer all during the year.

Taking all these things together, we can get a pretty good line on the individuals of the flock by making observations in October and November. Hens that have pale shanks, are moulting late and have little yellow in the ear lobes as compared with the rest of the birds in the pen, are pretty sure to have been the heavy layers.

The greatest movement of the age considered from the standpoint of material prosperity is the awakening of the people to the need of better farming.

Gift of the Gods.

A meat packer's wagon rattled over the cobblestones down First avenue. Overhead roared an elevated train, and in the sunshine on the curb sat five boys shooting craps.

Suddenly one of them darted out into the street, swung himself up on the passing wagon, seized a ham and jumped off—into the arms of a "white wing."

This agent of the city, after appropriating the ham, gave the boy a vigorous shaking and flung him toward the sidewalk.

Immediately all five boys vanished into the earth.

The "white wing" looked down the street and the wagon had disappeared as completely as the boys, with the driver quite unconscious of any unusual stir.

He looked in every direction; then, doubtless thanking the gods for their gift, he wrapped the ham in a newspaper and he too disappeared down a side street.—New York Post.

A Novel Craft.

In the harbor of Port Weller, the Ontario entrance of the Welland ship canal, says the Engineering News, the surveying staff uses a flat bottomed boat that can lift itself clear of the water. It is a drill boat or sounding scow, of catamaran model, built particularly for the work of fixing the elevation of the rock that underlies the bottom of the river. In order to have a steady platform on which to work during rough weather the surveyors had the scow made with a slot at each corner, through which a very heavy spud or post can be raised or lowered. The lifting mechanism consists of a wheel on top of each post, over which a wire cable passes from the side of the scow to an individual engine. When the scow heaves and sways in the water too much workmen start the four engines, and presently the scow is standing firm, with its four stout legs on the bottom of the river.

Slipshod English.

Here are some specimens of very common errors:

Admit for confess. To admit is to concede something affirmed. An unaccused offender cannot admit his guilt.

Adopt. "He adopted a disguise." One may adopt a child or an opinion, but a disguise is assumed.

Aggravate for irritate. "He aggravated me by his insolence." To aggravate is to augment the disagreeableness of something already disagreeable or the badness of something bad. But a person cannot be aggravated, even if disagreeable or bad.

All of. "He gave all of his propty." The words are contradictory. An entire thing cannot be of itself. Omit the preposition.

At for by. "She was shocked at his conduct." This very common solecism is without excuse.—Exchange.

Trenches In War.

The late British general Sir William Butler in the course of an article that appeared in a military magazine nearly forty years ago thus spoke his mind about the use of trenches in time of war: "The spade may be nearly as dangerous to the army that uses it as to the one that neglects it. Like everything else, it is good in its way. That way is given a long way, but its end can be reached. If the infantry soldier gets thoroughly convinced that in the sheltered trench lie his hopes of safety he will doubtless be a hard man to drive out of these trenches. But it may also be a difficult matter to drive him on from them to the front. Digging may save a battle from being lost, but it has never won a decisive victory, and it probably never will."—Manchester Guardian.

Dragoons.

Four centuries ago, when firearms were in their infancy, soldiers were named from the weapons they bore. Thus infantrymen were called "pike" or "shot," according to their weapons. The "dragon" was a short musket or carbine, and the soldiers who bore them were dragoons. The original dragoons were mounted infantrymen, being organized as infantry. On this account, being without cavalry training, they were decidedly poor horsemen, but they improved until they were classed as medium cavalry.—American Boy.

Gold and Iron.

Iron and gold when melted together may be mixed in various proportions and hardened or crystallized. Alloys containing 10 per cent of gold are harder than pure iron, but as the proportion of gold increases above that amount the alloy becomes softer. Silver and iron do not form alloys.

Illuminative.

"This meter," explained the gas company official, "measures the quantity of gas you use."

"And," asked the misanthrope who is present on all gladsome occasions, "where is the meter which measures what you charge for?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Not Artistic Work.

Footelight—And was the performance artistic? Miss Sue Brette—No; the scenery and the leading lady were both badly painted.—Yonkers Statesman.

Too Much to Bear.

Friend—Why are you crying, Bobby? Bobby—Ma whipped me because my face was dirty and then washed it.—Judge.

By the street of By-and-by we arrive at the house of Never.—Cervantes.
