COLOSSAL GRAVEYARDS.

Imposing Mountains That Are Built of Animal Skeletons.

Many of the most imposing mountain ranges of the globe are largely made up of limestones composed almost entirely of the hard parts of animals which once lived in the sea, the most important of these rock building forms being of a very small size. The solid earth is, in fact, a colossal graveyard, and many of its most imposing elevations are stupendous tombstones.

The chalk making up the white cliffs to which England owes her name of Albion (Latin, albus, white) is chiefly composed of microscopic shells closely resembling those now found at the bottom of the sea. Hills and mountain ranges largely made of this chalk extend from Britain and France round the shores of the Mediterranean and away into Asia and are largely represented in other parts of the world. Even more remarkable is the limestone of which the pyramids are built.

This is chiefly made up of coin shaped shells (mummulites), partly responsible, no doubt, for eastern legends of magic money. The limestone containing them attains a thickness of several thousand feet and is the material of which many mountain ranges are largely built. Beginning on the west, we have the Pyrenees and Alps, followed by the Carpathians, Caucasus, mountains of Asia Minor, north Africa and Baluchistan and, lastly, the Suleiman mountains, Himalayas and ranges in China and Japan.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

It Dazed the Culprit's Lawyer, Who Felt He Had Won His Case.

The following experience of a Mississippi lawyer was related by himself years ago. He said:

I was defending a prisoner for horse stealing, and seeing no other means of defending him under the circumstances I set up the plea of insanity. I argued it at length, read many extracts from works of medical jurisprudence and had the patient attention of the court.

The prosecuting attorney did not attempt to reply to my argument or controvert my authorities. I seemed to have things my own way and whispered to the prisoner that he needn't be uneasy.

Then came the judge's charge, in which he reminded the jury that there was no dispute between counsel as to the facts of the case. Indeed there could not have been, for several witnesses had sworn positively that they saw my client steal the horse.

"But," concluded the court, "the plea of insanity has been set up, and I charge you, gentlemen of the jury, that it should receive your very grave and serious deliberation, but I must be allowed to say, gentlemen, that for myself, upon a review of the whole case, I can discover no evidence of insanity on the part of the prisoner, except perhaps in the selection of his counsel."—Chicago News.

This Country of Bigness.

America is a quarter section, not a square foot country. It is the land of the biggest lakes, the longest rivers, the fastest trains, the tallest buildings, the land of the huge corporation and the spacious farm and the prodigious industrial enterprise. The inhabitant of this country of bigness feels the urge of these immeasurable interests, therefore his fascination for large figures and enormous scales of measurement. He feels that he must keep up to the pace of business or get out of the game or be run over. One advance step necessitates a longer stride to follow. He must always have his "next." * * * Big and swift business always fascinates the American mind.—From "American Ideals," by Clayton Sedgwick Cooper.

Habits of the Wildcat.

To say that a dog can "whip his weight in wildcats" is to pay about the highest tribute to his strength, courage and activity, and there are very few dogs that would care to earn such a tribute if they understood all it implied. Not that a wildcat is of a specially aggressive disposition. On the contrary, he would sooner mind his own business any time than fight. So anxious is he as a rule to keep out of trouble that he has often been accused of cowardice, but he has on so many occasions given evidence of the most desperate courage that it is doubtful if the accusation is a fair one. When wounded or at bay he is perhaps as dangerous as any creature of his size.

The Orkney Islands.

"The member from the Orkneys" is the only man in the British house of commons who can say he sits for 200 islands. Only sixty of the islands are inhabited, but the constituency embraces more than 60,000 people.

The Orkneys were once given by Norway to England as security for a queen's dower and never redeemed. In the islands the voters must go to the polls by boats, and in some cases the distance to be traveled is eight miles.

Oxen Cavalry.

Madagascar possesses the only oxen cavalry regiment in the world. The climate is so unhealthy for horses that some substitute had to be found. The oxen have been trained to maneuver with surprising skill, but of course are not speedy.

His Joke.

"Hicks has a job I wouldn't care for—pouring molten metal in a foundry."

"Must be hot work."

"You bet! He perspires at every pour."—Boston Transcript.

In Memoriam.

In sad, but loving remembrance of my dear sister, who departed this life about 3 years ago.

How well I remember, dear sister,
The night you past away;
My heart was in great agony
To see you go away.

I believe it was best for sister,
As Jesus has taken her away;
As it relieved her of her misery,
To go to a world of rest.

It left us all heart broken,
For she was so kind and so true;
And she was my only sister,
That's why I didn't want her to go.

She leaves three darling daughters,
To contend with trials in life;
I hope and pray to Jesus,
That He will carry them through.

It's hard for me to tell it—
As I went to sister's bed;
She told me she was going to Jesus,
In Heaven where there is rest.

As I said good-bye to sister and kissed her,
To see her on earth no more;
But on that bright and happy morning,
I'll meet her face to face.
