HEAVY TOLLS ON SUSQUEHANNA BRIDGE

After two months of operation, the new Susquehanna toll bridge at Havre de Grace has proved its ability as a Class A money-maker, the State Roads Commission disclosed yesterday.

Checking up on the latest toll collection reports, William A. Codd, chief auditor, announced the bridge currently was producing enough revenue to pay debt service on its own bonds and in addition on those of the new Potomac river bridge, which hasn't opened yet.

WARNS DRIVERS

More than 125,000 automobiles were still uninspected at midnight last Friday when the annual save-a-life automobile inspection campaign reached its dead line, according to an estimate made by W. Lee Elgin, Commission of Motor Vehicles.

All day Friday the more than 1,400 inspection stations throughout the State were swamped with motorists who had waited until the last day to have their cars inspected.

At some stations the attendants were so rushed that they found little time to sell gasoline or oil or do repair work. One station owner, who usually remains open until midnight, advised the motor vehicles office that he was going to close at 5.30 P. M. for he was doing nothing but inspection work.

Since all motorists who have not had their cars inspected will be summoned either by State, city or county police to go immediately to an inspection station and have their cars inspected, the commissioner's office has mailed more than 60,000 summonses to police officials in every section of the State.

If a motorist should fail to respond to his summons he will have to take his car to the office of the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles for an inspection. If the automobile is found to be unsafe, the car's license will be revoked.

If the commissioner's office finds any defects the motorists will be advised to have them repaired at once or the license will be taken away.
