The Town Commissioners will place a number of iron benches in the public square for the pleasure and comfort of our people. They will also place a large electric light over the fountain to expose any spooning on the square at night. Good idea, indeed.

Woman's Love.

It takes a hundred men to make an encampment, but it takes only the influence of one woman to make a home. I not only admire woman as the most beautiful object ever created, but I reverence her as the redeemed glory of humanity, the sanctuary of all virtues, the pledge of all perfect qualities of heart and head. It is because women are so much better than men that their faults are considered greater. The one thing in this world that is considered constant, the only peak that rises above the clouds, the window in which the light burns forever, the one star that darkness cannot quench, is woman's love. It rises to the greatest height; it sinks to the lowest depths; it forgives the most cruel injuries. A woman's love is the perfume of the heart. This is the real love that subdues the earth; the love that has wrought miracles of art; that gives us music all the way from cradle song to the grand symphony that bears the soul away on wings of fire—a love that is greater than power, sweeter than life and stronger than death.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Crooked Straits.

Perhaps the most remarkable and intricate strait in the world is likely to be chucked on the scrap heap. Its day, which began late in history, is almost over. The Panama canal has diverted most of its traffic and will presently divert much more. The famous explorer Magellan was the first man to brave the dangers of this tortuous passage. He did it in a windjammer, but as a rule only steamships follow in his train. It is too crooked a strait for the sailing ship.

In the first place, the strait of Magellan is 400 miles long. It is as twisty and bendy as a serpent or an eel, and in places it is flanked with snow capped mountains 7,000 feet high.

It would help matters if ships could anchor, but they cannot. The water is too deep. So this strait has never been popular with sailing skippers, and they prefer the rigors of the Horn and several hundred miles farther around.

The Cheering Wasn't Renewed.

Professor R. W. Lee of McGill university law school was once addressing the Ontario Bar association, and the Osgoode hall students were present. Of course Dean Lee's address had to be punctuated by the usual students' outbursts. Dean Lee touched on ancient and modern law and the methods of lawyers and judges. Taking up one line of legal problems, he said: "Now, if I asked a lawyer of such and such an age this question he would answer so and so or something to that effect. But, coming down to the present day, if I were to ask the same question of an Osgoode hall student"— Instantly the noise began. The students yelled and cheered and applauded and stamped on the floor and pounded their desks. It was some noise, but at last it subsided. Dean Lee, unruffled, went on to say, "If I were to ask an Osgoode hall student he would answer, 'I don't know.'"—Silence.

Song of the Marines.

The United States marine corps is unique in all branches of the American services in having a distinctive marching song that is as swingy and catchy as many of the foreign marching songs. True, West Point has its Benny Havens song, and the Seventh cavalry marches to the inspiring tune of Garry Owen, but the "Halls of Montezuma" is sung by all who wear the marine's uniform. One verse of the song, a favorite one, runs:

Our flag's unfurled to every breeze
From dawn to setting sun.
We have fought in every clime and place
Where we could take a gun.
In the snow of faroff northern lands
And in sunny tropic scenes
You will find us always on the job,
The United States marines.

His Own Fault.

Said the waiter to a noisy card party in a hotel bedroom: "I've been sent to ask you to make less noise, gentlemen. The gentleman in the next room says he can't read."

"Tell him," was the reply of the host, "that he ought to be ashamed of himself. Why, I could read when I was five years old."—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

Diamonds.

Diamonds are supposed to be composed of "pure carbon." At least the authorities tell us that such is the case. The genesis of the diamond remains one of the unsolved problems of science, with the balance of the evidence favoring the theory of vegetable origin.—New York American.

One Way to Rest.

There is nothing that will rest you so quickly as to sit on a straight back chair and, lifting the feet from the floor, push them out in front of you as far as possible, stretch the arms, put the head back, open the mouth wide and make yourself yawn.

Ought to Cheer Him.

Figg—What's the matter, old man? You're looking wretched. Fogg—I'm not myself at all today. Figg—Oh, come; that's nothing to feel wretched about!—Exchange.

Still a Baby.

"The last time I saw him was thirty years ago, when he was a baby."

"Well, I saw him yesterday, and he hasn't changed a bit."

The Difference.

"Papa, what is the difference between a fiddler and a violinist?"

"About $300 an evening, my child."—Musical America.
