THE STORE WITH A SMILE

No, the store itself does not smile, but everybody in it does.

We have here a Store Family of nearly 1400 contented, happy people. Contented, because they are receiving a fair compensation for their service — a compensation which they themselves regulate in proportion to their own effort and efficiency.

Happy, because they are fairly treated, and because their only concern is to see that every customer is given courteous, honest, helpful service.

It is a store which you will like to visit — not the cold, awe-inspiring business machine which many department stores are, but a human store — a store with a personality— an organization of nearly 1400 souls with but the single purpose of serving you well— and smilingly.

DISEASE PREVENTION FOR FARM HOMES

Screening Against Flies And Use Of Earth Closets Is Advised.

T. H. TALIAFERRO,
Maryland Agricultural College.

The advent of spring is closely followed in most places by the appearance of flies. In rural communities, especially on the farm, it seems practically impossible to prevent the fly nuisance on the farm, particularly so, if there are a number of animals about the place.

The fly, primarily a scavenger, would be a blessing if he would confine himself strictly to that business and remain at or near the manure pile, etc. He insists, however, on traveling, and thus finds his way into houses, even those in which an honest effort is made to keep the premises, particularly the kitchen, clean, and to put scraps, parings, etc., into properly covered cans.

The Fly Pest.

His favorite abode, when sojourning at the house, is the kitchen or dining room, and his choice as to a resting place and supply station is the food to be eaten or the utensil in which it is served. He is also very fond roaming over the face, particularly the lips, of a sleeping child. This desire is strengthened when evidences of indulgence in food, generally stick or greasy in nature, are found around the mouth.

Unless measures are taken which will prevent his doing so, the probability is that the fly, in his journeys to and from the house, has regaled himself upon human excreta or waste and that he is furnishing free transportation for typhoid, dysentery, and other disease germs which are found in the excreta.

Having reached the house, the fly, regardless of the fact that he may, for example, be teeming with colon bacilli, enters upon his regular routine, with the altogether too frequent result that there is an outbreak of typhoid fever.

Proper Sanitation.

On the farm it is not always possible, however, to have an up-to-date sanitary system. It is possible, however, to build or remodel a privy, so that the fly can not gain access to the human excreta. In this way, the opportunity for the fly to transmit certain disease germs to the food which is to be eaten in the house, etc., is minimized. It is imperative that such protection should be afforded, if health is to be conserved. The question of the slight increase in cost, if any, should not carry weight as an objection, for the reason that one outbreak of typhoid fever or dysentery, with the resultant loss of time and money, will prove far more expensive. Do not, however, make the mistake so often observed on farms, and elsewhere, of providing proper accommodation for everyone except the servants. The fly does not differentiate when he is foraging, neither do the colon bacilli consider social distinctions when choosing an abiding place. Screening the dwelling house is important, but it is not sufficient. The privy must be sanitary and fly proof. If it is fly proof, it is also impossible for fowls and animals to gain access to the human excreta.

Dry Earth Closet.

One of the best types of privies is the dry earth closet, in which the fresh excreta is covered with a small amount of dry earth taken from a box conveniently placed in the building. Lime also may be used with excellent results.

As to the construction of the building, individual tastes may govern, provided the fly is kept out and the place is kept in good order. Covers should be provided for the openings in the seat when not in use. The door, and particularly the window, should be screened to keep out flies and to permit the circulation of fresh air. Buckets or similar receptacles should be so placed beneath the openings as to receive the excreta. The buckets should be removed at intervals, cleansed and replaced. If it is not possible to obtain suitable buckets, a water-tight trough should be built with a stout ring in the end or side and sledge runners under it. The ring and the sledge runners will prove to be of great advantage when it is found necessary to remove the trough for emptying, etc. An application of lime in and around the trough or buckets from time to time will improve the sanitary conditions. A door which will fit tight when closed should be placed at the rear or side of the building to facilitate the removal of the buckets or trough. This door may be fitted with hinges or may slide in a groove. The latter is probably the better. It may be built entirely of wood, but a stout wooden frame covered with heavy close-meshed wire is preferable, as it permits the free circulation of air, which tends to keep down offensive odors.

Dispose Of Waste.

It is useless to build a sanitary, fly-proof building unless it is kept in good shape and a place provided for the disposal of the excreta. It may be buried, put in a compost heap, if thought safe, etc., but it must be protected from flies until the germs of typhoid fever, dysentary, etc., are destroyed by bacteria.

Any information desired regarding the construction, etc., of a fly-proof earth closet may be obtained from the Engineering Division of the Maryland Agricultural College, College Park, Md.
