That Backache Spells Danger!

Action Today May Save Chestertown People Future Misery.

A bad back isn't a bad thing if it serves as a warning of hidden kidney disorders. Kidney diseases are frightfully common today. We over-do so much. We don't give the kidneys a chance to rest up, and while a bad back, some urinary disorder, an occasional dizzy spell or a persistent headache may be the only outward sign, the kidney trouble that is behind it all may be overlooked or neglected. Put your signs to use. Take them as warnings. Fight off kidney weakness. It takes only a slight kidney disorder to start a case of fatal Bright's disease, from which 100,000 people die in the United States every year. Prompt treatment at first—that's all that's necessary to keep kidney weakness from turning into gravel, dropsy, gout, heart trouble or Bright's. Use Doan's Kidney Pills—the oldest, the most widely used, the best-recommended Kidney Pill. Forty thousand Americans recommend them publicly. Here's one Chestertown case:

John M. South, photographer, Chestertown, says: "I suffered a great deal from my back and kidneys. The passages of the kidney secretions were irregular and I had pains through my sides and back. I got Doan's Kidney Pills at Toulson's Drug Store and they gave me relief."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. South had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

MOSBY'S PRESENT

A Gift and Message That Tickled Lincoln's Sense of Humor.

RETURNING THE COMPLIMENT.

An Equivalent That Was Appreciated and Treasured by the Confederate Colonel—An Episode Born of the Capture of General Stoughton.

Colonel John S. Mosby, the southern cavalry leader in the war between the states, accumulated many mementos of that long and bloody struggle, but none which he treasured more jealously than a lock of dark hair wrapped in a faded yellow scrap of newspaper. The hair was cut from the head of Abraham Lincoln. It was Lincoln's own hand which cut it, and the great war president himself who sent it.

In the spring of 1863 the Army of the Potomac lay along the north bank of the Rappahannock, about fifty miles south of Washington. The intervening country was, of course, in the possession of the Union troops. Off in the recesses of the Blue Ridge mountains, about thirty miles westward, was Colonel Mosby, with a body of picked southern cavalrymen, seeking to do what injury he could to the Federal outposts and lines of communication.

About the middle of March there encamped at Fairfax Court House, a village of about 500 inhabitants, halfway between Washington and the army on the Rappahannock, a force of several thousand Union troops under General Stoughton.

From a military point of view, his camp at Fairfax was nearly as safe as Boston. Between his own force and the southern army, under General Lee, lay General Hooker's great Army of the Potomac. Even Colonel Mosby's small force—less than a hundred men—was thirty miles away.

Nevertheless, Colonel Mosby determined to capture General Stoughton. Selecting twenty of his best troopers, he started one drizzly March afternoon for Stoughton's camp. It was after midnight when he ran into the first picket, who was easily captured in the darkness. And thus, taking picket after picket in the black night, Colonel Mosby made his way without alarm into the village, until he entered General Stoughton's bedchamber.

The unhappy officer was compelled to dress and accompany his captors. The pitch black, rainy night and the fact that the men of both commands wore rubber capes of the same style rendered it impossible for the prisoners, Stoughton included, to determine the number of the enemy. With half a hundred prisoners and a hundred horses, Colonel Mosby quietly made his way out of the camp and was soon beyond reach of pursuit.

The adventure created a stir in military quarters. Stoughton was roundly censured for allowing himself thus to be stolen from the midst of his troops, although he was in nowise to blame.

President Lincoln, whose sense of humor nothing could quench, remarked, when told of the affair, that he did not mind losing the general, but the hundred horses were a serious matter. "I can make a general with the scratch of a pen," he said dryly, "but I can't make horses."

Shortly afterward Colonel Mosby, with a few companions, was reconnoitering in the vicinity of Washington. On the road he encountered an old Dutch market woman taking her garden truck in her cart to peddle it through the Washington streets. Colonel Mosby stopped and questioned her. Noticing a pair of scissors at her belt and having heard of President Lincoln's comments on General Stoughton's capture, he said:

"Do you know Mr. Lincoln?"

"Yah," replied the old woman. "Seen him often, I have."

Taking the scissors, Colonel Mosby cut off a lock of his hair, and wrapping it in a piece of paper handed it to the old woman, saying:

"I'm Colonel Mosby. When you get to Washington go to the White House and tell the president that Colonel Mosby sent him this lock of his hair and say also that he is coming over into Washington some night to get a lock of the president's hair."

The old market woman went her way, and Colonel Mosby rode back and forgot the incident. Some weeks later, however, when making another reconnoissance in that neighborhood, the old woman hailed him from a roadside cottage. Hurrying into the cottage, she brought forth a scrap of newspaper and delivered it to Colonel Mosby.

"Here iss a lock of President Lincoln's hair," she said. "He tolt me to say to you that he hat rather you vould not come ofer to see him and that he send it to you by me. Here it iss!"—Youth's Companion.

As She Saw It.

"What is the meaning of specter, Lizzie?"

"Please, sir, I don't know."

"Now, think. What is the specter that usually frightens people?"

"The school 'spector, sir."—Pall Mall Gazette.
