The Farmer's Wife.

In the Woman's Home Companion is an article by a farmer's wife, who says:

"Given a good husband and good health, there's no one in the world who needs pity less than the farmer's wife. She has a rich and resourceful life if she will make it so, and she usually does. She's the most independent woman on earth of panics and money stringencies and things of that sort. Her family simply can't go hungry. There'll always be potatoes and turnips down in the cellar and meat in the smokehouse, to say the least. She always has eggs and chickens and milk. She can take a bushel of wheat to the mill and get it ground for 10 cents. She can draw on her storeroom for fruit and sweets, and her table is supplied. When the mechanic is out of work his family must stop eating or live on charity, but it isn't so in the farmer's family. Capital and labor have got to do some mighty hard grinding before they grind the farmer."

Sunken Craft Around New York.

The shores of Greater New York are almost surrounded with hulks. For instance, an old navy schooner, the Sarah, is embedded in the land at Nineteenth street, East river. At Ninety-sixth street and East river, underneath the large power house, lie the bones of three or more old coasting schooners and sloops. Alongside the rubber works in College Point are the remains of the schooner William Morrell, bulkheaded in and covered up with refuse. At Rockaway Point the bones of the schooner Ella Deeves and other small schooners can be found two blocks inland, sanded up. Just below Midland Beach can be found the remains of the old sloop Jane. Over near Whale creek, Greenpoint, can be found the skeleton of the schooner Michael C. Collins. Riker's island is surrounded with the remains of scows and sailing craft of years ago.—New York World.

Wrong Quarry.

With a wild sweep the wind tore round a sudden corner and removed the hat from the head of a respectable and nearsighted citizen who chanced to be passing.

Peering wildly round, the man thought he saw his hat in a yard behind a high fence. Hastily climbing over, he started to chase it, but each time he thought he had caught it, it got yet another move on.

Then a woman's angry voice broke on his ears.

"What are you doing there?" she demanded shrilly.

He explained mildly that he was only trying to retrieve his hat, whereupon the woman said, in wonder:

"Your hat? Well, I don't know where it is, but that's our little black hen you're chasing!"—London Mail.

Magic Italian Lakes.

Every one knows how beautiful the Italian lakes are and how luxuriant is the vegetation on their banks. This is due to a large extent to the heat absorbed in summer by the water, stored up and given out slowly in cold weather.

A calculation has been made by a scientist named Vercelli. He estimates that Lake Como has an area of 136 square kilometers and an average depth of about 600 feet. In some places the depth is twice that.

During midsummer this mass of water absorbs each bright day an amount of heat equal to that produced by burning 34,000 tons of coal. This storing up of heat goes on from the end of February until the water reaches its highest temperature in August.

From that time on the water gives out heat to the surrounding stones until spring comes again, so that it is no wonder that this region is a floral paradise.—Pittsburgh Press.

Science In the Home.

Home is the halfway house between earth and heaven. As such it needs the practical and the ideal, both combined, more than any other human institution. The earth side of a home must be absolutely practical, and the heaven side must be absolutely ideal if the home is to be a home.

There is more need for science in the home than for science anywhere else. Not because science is the most important thing in the home, but because the most neglected thing is always the most important. The average home is a conglomeration of guesswork, patchwork and overwork. The guesswork is the fault of the man, the overwork of the woman, the patchwork of them both. A little science in advance would prevent most of the trouble.—Independent.

Cats—Up.

"Sarah," said her mistress during the dinner hour, "will you go down to the basement and get the catsup?"

Sarah departed, and a few minutes later the family heard a great shooing and scampering of feet. Shortly after Sarah came breathlessly into the dining room and said to her astonished mistress, "They're up, mum."

"What are up?"

"The cats, mum."—Youth's Companion.

Her Argument.

"Going to drop your cooking lessons right in the middle of the course? Why, I heard you got a proposal of marriage on the strength of going to cooking school."

"I did. And now that I am going to be married, what's the use of bothering any further about cooking lessons?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The System.

First Trolley Conductor—Why was Kelly fired? Second Trolley Conductor—His car struck a man at Steenth street and carried him a block on the fender. After collecting a nickel from him Kelly in the excitement forgot to ring it up—and the man was a spotter!—Life.

Reserved Oyster Area Soon Open

This Conservation Commission is preparing for the reopening of the reserved area on the Western Shore of the Chesapeake known as Dares Wharf.

The state two years ago planted 114,000 bushels of seed oysters on this ground and closed it against all oystermen. The Commission proposes to throw these grounds open early in December to all those who desire to work on the bedded stock. A special license will have to be taken out by all who work the bed, and an additional tax of five cents will be collected for every bushel caught.

In order to accommodate all parties wanting licenses, Comptroller McMullin has deputized W. H. Killian, of the State Conservation Commission, to issue licenses to all applicants for such privilege.

Chief Engineer Earle, with the Deputy commander, left Baltimore last Wednesday to mark out the territory which will be advertised by proclamation.

It seemed as if weights were tied to my back and pulling me down. I felt tired out all the time and I surely was in miserable condition. I finally used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured from M. A. Toulson's Drug store, and the trouble entirely disappeared."
