PLANT YOUR BULBS IN THE FALL

Should Be Placed In Rich Garden Soil At Uniform Depth.

B. W. Anspon Furnishes List Of Bulbs For Use In The Flower Garden.

College Park, Md., Oct. 12.—In answer to many inquiries received by the State College of Agriculture regarding the planting of bulbs, B. W. Anspon, in charge of floriculture, says, "Probably no class of plants enjoy such general public favor as do the spring flowering bulbs. This popularity is due largely to the ease with which they can be grown and their season to bloom. Coming at the time of the year after the passing of winter, their bright and gaudy colors are exceedingly attractive. Beginning in early spring, we have Snow Drops and Crocuses, which are always pleasing. It is, however, to the Dutch bulbs, such as the Hyacinths, Tulips, Daffodils that we look forward to the gorgeous part of the spring display. Success with bulbs is primarily a question of providing suitable conditions for the developments of the flowers. These are already formed inside of the bulb. On cutting open the tulip or hyacinth, we can see the minature flower enclosed by the bulb scale. In view of the above fact, it stands to reason that [illegible]ays to secure large, firm bulbs.

Soil.

Any good garden soil, providing it is well drained and friable is suitable for bulbs. Under no conditions should land intended for bulbs be fertilized with fresh stable manure. This always results in injury to the bulbs. Where the soil is not as rich as it should be, well rotted manure should be deeply worked into the soil to a depth of 10 to 12 inches or bone meal may be used.

Depth Of Planting.

To secure a display of flowers, all bulbs should be planted to a uniform depth. Where one uses a dibble or trowel, there is often danger of having bulbs at unequal depths. To secure a uniform depth, throw out the soil from the bed to the depth to which the bulbs are to be planted. Place on this an inch or so of sand, to serve as the means of drainage for the bulbs. Place the bulbs directly on this cushion of sand, spacing them according to the kind of bulb. Hyacinths can be planted six inches deep and six to eight inches part. Tulips, to a depth of from four to five inches and four to six inches apart. Daffodils, depending upon the size of the bulb, generally about one and one-half times their own depth,—three to four inches apart for the smaller sorts and five to six inches apart for the larger. After planting, fill in the soil that has been taken out beforehand and round off the beds so as to shed water. After the ground freezes, so that there is a thin crust formed, give the bulbs protection by covering with a layer of straw, leaves or litter to a depth of three to four inches. Leave this covering on until the danger from freezing is over.

WARSHIP FIGHTING TOPS.

They Are Now Mainly Used For Sentry and Signaling Work.

Lord Nelson was killed by a musket ball fired from the crosstrees of his French antagonist. Because of this fighting tops came into existence and, being developed to keep pace with other parts of naval construction, continue to be a traditional feature of the world's navies.

A century ago, when fighting men—marines, boarding parties, gun crews—crowded the upper decks of a warship, a sharpshooter posted aloft picked off many a man. But a big battleship in action today shows not a mark to the man in the fighting top.

In the days when it still remained possible for boatloads of armed men to swarm up the sides and board a fighting ship plunging shots were dropped from the fighting top. But with great steel walls overhanging the waves and never an accommodation ladder swung out for their welcome it is impossible for uninvited guests to set foot on the modern deck.

The captain of the fighting top is usually in control of flag, semaphore and heliograph signaling, leaving the wireless to an invisible operator interned somewhere in the ship's vitals. He is the sentry against small inquisitive craft and may enforce his orders by the rattle of a light quick firer.

He has the outlook, reports and questions passing ships and has virtues as a detective against spies. His functions, however, are limited. He is not high enough placed to see the submarine creeping along a score of feet beneath the surface or to note its wake of broken water.

The fighting top is in big cruisers quite a massive affair and no longer the tiny breastwork behind which the picked riflemen of the ancients knelt. A duplicate set of range finders is usually kept there and used to check off the work of the experts in the fire control tower. There are light quick firers and machine guns, possibly also a high angle gun or two for use against air craft.—Pearson's.

Original Home of Welshmen.

Jutland was probably the original home of our Kymric ancestors, as well as (at a later period) of some so called Saxon invaders. It was peopled in classical times by the Cimbri, identified by ethnologists with the Cymry, or modern Welshmen. The Germans magnanimously declined to annex Jutland with Schleswig-Holstein. It was then considered a worthless waste of moors, sand dunes and marshes. But the industrious Danes have transformed what one English traveler styled "a forsaken wilderness" into the most prosperous pastoral countries of western Europe.—Westminster Gazette.

Bee's Double Stomach.

The bee has two distinct stomachs. In the first it stores away the honey it so industriously gathers up from the flowers until such time as it is ready to yield it up, while the other stomach is used simply and solely for digestion purposes. Thus the food and the honey are never mixed. When the bee returns to the hive and is ready to deposit the honey it has gathered it contracts the muscles of the stomach, by which act the honey is ejected through the mouth. As to bee food, it is various in kind, consisting largely of the honey it so patiently makes for others.

No "Poor Land."

"That land of yours was mighty poor when you bought it," a friend of ours remarked to the wide awake owner of a beautiful farm we passed the other day, whereupon the owner delivered himself of a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation—or mighty nearly so. "You're mistaken," he said. "There's not any poor land when you manage it right." It is a true rule that "there is more in the man than there is in the land."—Progressive Farmer.

Superstitions of Royalty.

Caesar, Napoleon, Bismarck and others were not above the superstition of "lucky" and "unlucky" days. Thursday was the "unlucky" day of Henry VIII., of his son Edward and of his daughters, Mary and Elizabeth. It is strange that they should have died upon this day.

As Regards Vanity.

"All is vanity. At least so says the philosopher."

"I don't know about that," chimed in the Plunkville sage, "but there is enough of it to keep the drug stores doing a good business in complexion contraptions."—Exchange.

Couldn't Fool Him.

Lecturer (in small town)—Of course you all know what the inside of a corpuscle is like. Chairman of Meeting (interrupting)—Most of us do, but ye better explain it for the benefit of them that has never been inside one. —Puck.

Got Familiar With Them.

Professor Fugue — What do you mean, Mr. Jones, by speaking of Dick Wagner, Ludie Beethoven, Charlie Gounod and Fred Handel? Jones—Well, you told me to get familiar with the great composers.—Musical America.

Just Change.

Mrs. Bacon—Does your husband carry any life insurance? Mrs. Egbert—Well, I never happened to run against any when I've been going through his pockets at night.—Yonkers Statesman.

To Preserve Cider.

The only satisfactory way of preserving cider in its sweet, fresh state is to treat it the same as grape juice is treated.

Take the cider as it comes from the press and gradually heat to a temperature of 170 to 180 degrees. Care should be taken not to heat it to more than 180 degrees, else the flavor will be harmed. After the temperature has been held at that point for fifteen minutes the juice is bottled at once in clean, airtight bottles that have been previously scalded and are hot when the cider is introduced.

Cork with stoppers that can be pushed into the neck of the bottles a little below the neck of the rim and fill the small cavity with paraffin.—Farm and Fireside.
