HOW TO SECURE A UNIFORM STAND

IMPORTANCE OF GRADING SEED CORN IS EXPLAINED BY AN EXPERT.

PROPER PLANTING IMPORTANT

County Demonstration Agents Urge Care In Planting To Avoid Labor Waste.

College Park, April 26.—The Maryland Agricultural Extension Service through its county demonstration agents is encouragaing every effort on the part of farmers to secure uniform stands of corn during the coming season. Following the discussions of the importance the proper selection of seed and the preparation of the seed bed, W. B. Kemp, specialist in crops for the Extension Service, is furnishing county demonstration agents with instructions on the proper planting of corn for their boys' club members. He says:

Grading The Seed.

"An important step toward securing a uniform stand is to grade the corn. If a planter is used, grading is very important because grains which vary in size and shape will not drop with regularity. Then too, uniform seed will probably cause a greater uniformity in the crop and it may be easier to select a sample for the fall corn show and for seed the following year. To do this, shell off and discard the non-uniform kernels at butt and tip of ear. Next shell into a separate basin or other convenient receptacle, the corn remaining on each ear and pour together only the corn from those ears, the grains of which are uniform in size and shape. Thus, your corn will gradually be brought nearer to the type desired.

Rate Of Planting.

"If the rows are three and one-half feet apart, the corn should be planted so that the stand may be thinned to one stalk for each 12 to 18 inches of row. If the corn is checked, or planted so that it can be cultivated both ways, this is equivalent to about three stalks per hill. Remember that better results will generally be obtained by planting too thick and then thinning to the stand desired, than by being compelled after the corn comes up, to replant thin or missing places. Poor soil will not generally permit such thick planting as rich soil, and a thick stand on sandy land will suffer more quickly from dry weather than the same stand on a field that is moderately stiff.

"Checked corn can be kept clean with less labor than corn which is cultivated only one way, and the difference in yield from the two methods of planting is slight, therefore, unless the ground is steep or entirely free from weeds and grass, check planting is generally preferred.

Depth Of Planting.

"The seed bed, season and character of soil will all help to regulate the depth to which corn should be planted. Sandy soil permits deeper planting than clay soil and dry weather permits deeper planting than wet weather. Always plant the grain deep enough so that it will be in contact with moist soil, yet shallow enough so that the sprouts can be sent to the surface without difficulty. Generally a depth of about one and one-half inches is one that can be recommended.

Time To Plant.

"The more nearly your corn can use the full spring and summer in growth, the greater chance it has to produce a heavy crop. Therefore, early planting is desirable. If it is planted too early, however, there is danger of a set back and loss of some of the plants in the cold spells which are apt to follow planting. If there is any one rule that can be given, it is to plant about a week after the first corn in your section is usually planted."

FEEDING YOUNG CHICKS.

College Park, April 26.—In directions furnished to the members of boys' agricultural clubs engaged in profitable poultry growing, Poultryman Roy H. Waite of the Maryland Experiment Station offers the following rations for growing chicks:

Mash Mixture.

Bran (wheat)	4 parts
Corn meal or hominy chop	2 parts
Middlings (wheat)	2 parts
Meat scrap	1 part

Salt, half a pound to each 100 lbs. mixture.

Grain Mixture.

Finely cracked corn	1 part
Cracked wheat	1 part
Hulled oats	1 part

"Use the above two mixtures, feeding the mash in shallow troughs twice daily (about 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.) and the grain in a litter of clean straw three times daily (early in the morning, noon, and late in the evening.) At first the mash may be moistened a little with water but feed it dry as soon as the chicks learn to eat it readily. Chopped hard-boiled eggs and oatmeal may be given sometimes as a relish. Aim to feed enough so that although they are hungry at each meal time, you are certain that they are not being starved. Little and often is the rule for feeding young chicks until they get to growing well."

JOHN BARLEYCORN A POOR SOLDIER

LET'S GO DRY AND WIN WAR

Prohibition Is Needed In the Ranks as Well as In the File—More Grain Is Used In Manufacture of Liquors Than Entire Fleet of German Submarines Can Sink In a Year.

By REX BEACH,
Of the Vigilantes.

Today I saw two drunken soldiers on the street. They were young soldiers, their uniforms were new and sufficiently unusual, alas, to excite attention. They were ordinary upstanding young fellows, better a lot than many of us who passed them by, for they had answered the call—they were not slackers. It came as a shock to see them swaying in their tracks, waving awkward gestures and grinning fatuously. Their eyes were bleared, they were foul mouthed and abusive. A block below were the tents of a recruiting station.

Some boys—they were nearing the age for enlistment—began to guy the intoxicated guardsmen; they betrayed contempt for both the men and their uniforms.

Women who were passing hurried faster. It was plain that this exhibition had not helped the cause of the recruiting squad down the street.

Prohibition the Answer.

Prohibition in the ranks was the first answer that suggested itself to me.

But why prohibition in the ranks if not in the file?

We are all soldiers in this war—soldiers of the lathe, soldiers of the plow, or we must quickly learn to be, else we shall go down in the general wreckage in the wake of the Hun. Why, then, deny to the man in khaki, who is physically fit to bear the shock of battle, that privilege which we weaker, less courageous brothers prize so highly—the glorious and inalienable privilege of getting drunk? No, manifestly that sort of prohibition isn't the right sort.

John Barleycorn Poor Drillmaster.

But if John Barleycorn is a bad recruiting sergeant he is a worse drillmaster and just at this particular crisis in our national affairs that makes him a real and potent influence for evil. Nor is that the worst that can be said about him. He is the prince of slackers, the king of waste and the veriest glutton in all the world. In his year of threatened famine he will, unless he is curbed, swallow more food than will the wide Atlantic, aided by the entire fleet of German U boats. Eighty million bushels of sound grain, 120,000,000 gallons of molasses—that is only a part of the good foodstuffs that will go to glut his monstrous appetite. And meanwhile Europe starves; our allies cry for food. In answer to that cry we sound the alarm for grain, more grain and ships, more ships, to put it in. We suffer panic from our lack of farm lands and farm hands.

The war will be won in the trenches of France and in the furrows of America, so we are told. We set ourselves to the task of training a million men in a year, of bringing new acres under the plow, and yet during the course of that twelve month we will consume in the form of alcoholic beverages alone enough grain to feed 16,000,000 mouths.

Waste Is Colossal.

It is all wrong. It is colossal waste. It is extravagance which the world cannot tolerate in this hour of stress. England, France and Russia have learned their lesson. Let us profit by their experience.

We need alcohol, yes. We will need more of it in war than in peace, but alcohol—usable, drinkable alcohol—can be made from swill, from refuse, from damaged grain. In fact, almost any food which is unfit to eat can be made fit to drink if one goes to the trouble, but of all the uses we can put it to, the drinking of alcohol is the least important.

"Let's Go Without It."

Nor is the fact that the byproducts from the process of liquor-making have a considerable commercial value a sufficient reason to warrant us in devoting to it 80,000,000 bushels of our all-too-scanty grain supply. Our live stock can subsist on other fodders than brewer's grains, our dairy cows can be made to give milk from food less vital to our own stomachs. So, too, in the matter of taxes. We levy a tremendous blackmail on bibulous old John Barleycorn, but we can raise that revenue elsewhere. He pays an undue share of taxes anyhow. If alcoholic liquor is a food we pay too high for the privilege of consuming it; if it is not a food let's go without it for awhile and foot the bill out of a greater economy.

War Is Sober Business.

We are in this war to win, and win we must, but war is a sober business. Just now bread is as vital to France as bullets; she needs American grain as badly as she needs American troops.

The war has come home to us, and we shall feel it sorely before we are through. Let us begin our sacrifice by a great big saving, a saving of 11,000,000 loaves a day—enough to feed the armies and the navies of our allies and ourselves. If we lose this fight we shall go broke. Lets go dry and win.

After we have tried it we may like it well enough to stay dry. Who knows?
