FARM NOTES

BRIEF ITEMS THAT WILL BE OF INTEREST TO OUR KENT COUNTY AGRICULTURISTS

The Home Garden.—The approach of spring brings to mind the time is near at hand when the garden for the coming year will be planned. The question of what to plant, and the proper time to carry out the operation, is quite a problem to the inexperienced, and many failures are recorded each year which may be traced to starting certain crops prematurely. Many of the hardier crops can be sown as soon as the soil is in condition, while others will surely fail if intrusted to the soil previous to settled weather before the ground is nicely warm. A few years ago we were the early bird on the garden proposition—so we thought. We had an early spring that year and the ground was dry and warm and we planted about a third of an acre with a great deal of care and choice of seed, etc. Then along in April came a rainy spell that threatened to wash our house away, and the seed we had planted thrown in. So it rained and rained and everything we planted rotted in the ground, and we said never again on the early garden proposition, and left George or John or some other fellow to do that, while we waited until the calendar showed us that warm weather was surely at hand. We at times hear of the gardener phrenologist who by a study of the coming of the birds, budding and blossoming of certain trees, shrubs and plants in his locality, sows and plants accordingly. This may be all right, but we advise early gardeners to be sure spring is here before they put in their truck. A garden is a fine thing for the home. It affords pleasure and profit in a large measure.

Horses On Decrease—Horses in this country reached their maximum in 1918 and since then have been gradually decreasing, according to data compiled by the Bureau of Crop Estimates, United States Department of Agriculture. While this statement applies to the United States as a whole, the information secured by the bureau relates primarily to the supply of horses on farms and ranches, the gradual decrease of which is attributed to motor vehicles. That the decline of the horse on farms is not due merely to the use of passenger automobiles is indicated by a survey recently undertaken by approximately 36,000 crop reporters representing the bureau in all sections of the country. They have reported the names of more than 49,000 farmers who use motor trucks on their farms. But the extent to which these trucks displace horses is problematical. In many cases the introduction of a truck on a farm indicates provision for increased hauling rather than an actual reduction in the number of horses used. The estimated number of horses on farms and ranches Jan. 1 of this year was 21,109,000, a decrease of 373,000 head, or 1.7 per cent compared with a year ago. The total value of these animals this year is estimated at $1,992,542,000 as against $2,114,897,000 last year. This means an average value per head for horses of all ages of $94.39, compared with $98.45 a year ago. The average value per head ten years ago was $108.03. From these figures it is not difficult to understand why the horse market is regarded as unsettled and the future equally uncertain. The best demand during the past year has been in the south, while decreases have occurred on the western ranges. During the past two years the increased demand for feed for high-priced meat animals has made it relatively more costly to keep a horse on the farm.

Most Important Implement On The Farm.—"The Country Gentleman," in a recent issue says: "One of the farm papers some years ago printed the following with reference to the disk harrow: 'Next to the lead pencil the disk harrow is the most important implement on the farm.' This statement has always come to mind when I saw a disk harrow. At first it seemed to me that it was putting it a little too strong. I couldn't quite get the plow, the binder and the thresher out of my mind. I thought perhaps the party who made the statement had an ax to grind. Such, however, I know now, was not the case. King says: "The early stirring up of the soil in the spring, preparatory to seeding, has for its main object the changing of the soil texture so that it will become: First, warmer; second, drier; third, better aerated; fourth, better suited to lessen the rate of evaporation of the deeper soil water." A disk harrow, in a measure, can do this. It can mellow the soil. It can open and aerate the soil particles. It has the capacity to do this work because of its peculiarly shaped disks and the angle at which they work. There is no harrow which so thoroughly pulverizes a soil in the spring after fall plowing as this tool, nor is there a farm tool that can do more good before and after spring plowing than the disk harrow. It has its limitations, of course. The depth it can reach is a factor that prevents its use to displace the plow. Its limitation is some very hard soils, too, also handicaps it for plowing."

Steer-Feeding Experiment.—In a steer-feeding experiment conducted last year on the government farm at Beltsville, Md., four lots of two-year-old steers were fed. The purpose was to compare cotton-seed meal and soaked velvet beans when used with and without the addition of shelled corn. The addition of corn to a ration composed of corn silage, cottonseed meal and wheat straw did not pay. The addition of corn to the ration of velvet beans and corn silage was profitable. The lot receiving corn silage and soaked velvet beans with a small quantity of cottonseed meal as an appetizer produced the most economical gains and showed the greatest profit, even though the daily gains and the selling price of the cattle were lower than those of any of the other lots.
