WOODROW WILSON

Reprinted from The Meth. Protestant
Dr. F. T. Benson, Editor.

The election is over. The people have spoken and a new administration is in the offing waiting to come into the harbor, and tie up at the wharf. We have no quarrel with the people for their choice. He is our president now, and he shall have our loyal support. He needs the prayers of all good people. Never has a man come into a high place with burdens heavier than he will be compelled to bear. Simply changing presidents is not going to solve the problems of civilization which the war has thrust upon us. That kind of talk will do for the campaign, but the country knows better. If President Harding can find us a way out of the wilderness, we will be glad.

But we are not writing to discuss the new President. We are thinking of a lonely man who now inhabits the White House. He is broken in health, and wounded in heart, and all because he nursed in his inmost soul a dream of "the Parliament of man, a federation of the world." We crowned Tennyson for dreaming that dream, but we have crucified Woodrow Wilson for dreaming it. Because that dream was in his heart the man poured out the wealth of his magnificient powers in such an abandon of sacrifice, that the strong man broke and became feeble as a little child. Slowly he is dragging his leaden feet from the thrall, and more slowly still the spark of his sublime genius is returning to his lips. But the world has turned from him in bitterness, and left him alone.

It matters nothing to us as to what party Woodrow Wilson has pledged allegiance. We ought not to allow our party prejudices to blind our eyes to the worth of men. Now when the long trial is over, and Woodrow Wilson retires to private life with his broken body, but his dauntless spirit, we can be just to him, and acknowledge the priceless service he has wrought in the interest of humanity. Lonely, deserted, and as some think, defeated, the deep-hearted know that he stands still a collossal figure among the children of men, and they hear still his halting speech calling men everywhere to the camp-fires of peace.

He is lonely and alone now, but it was not always thus. What a marvelous experience has been his, and how true it runs to history. He has tasted such powers as kings and potentates might envy. Nations have worshipped him afar. His name is a household word among all the races of men. The world robbed its gardens, and brought flowers to strew at his feet. In the days of war he was acclaimed as the world's saviour. When the waves of hate were deluging the world, he still spoke of love, and justice, and ultimate peace. His war cry was that men should fight that war should end forever. Mothers looking upon the face of their first-born slain in battle, blessed him because in his heart there was the holy purpose, that never again should a mother look upon the face of her first-born slain in battle.

This is the man against whom there has been such a storm of denunciation as has been rarely heard in this land. He has been desperately sick, wounded nigh unto death, but that brought no mercy from his enemies That he could not strike back was no deterrent to these brave men. Never before in all his history has the chilvalry of these states so utterly broken down as in the treatment of Woodrow Wilson.

In all the weary days of this great man's sickness, Congress never passed a single resolution of sympathy. In common humanity this ought to have been done. To add insult to injury, that same Congress sent a committee to the sacred precincts of the sick chamber to pry into his condition, and to see if the truth had been told, and that he was really sick. The feature of this campaign has been monotonously to cry, "Down with Wilson, and Wilsonism." It is a commentary upon his greatness, that this cry was ever raised until sickness had borne him down.

What has been the crime of this man that makes it necessary to visit upon him such condign punishment? Many things are said that are not true, and many are unjust. They say that he allowed a vast waste of public funds in the conduct of the war. There certainly was a great waste of public funds during the war. But there was a Congress to protect the national treasury, and check extravgance. Why is not that Congress blamed?

Does not every one know that an economical administration was impossible under the conditions attending this war? We had to accomplish in one year what Germany had been forty years doing. We entered the war when things were desperate in the extreme. To get an army in the field quickly was the supreme necessity. We had to build a conquering army in twelve months. That we did it is one of the finest achievements in all history. While this was going on we had no time to inspect bills, and punish profiteers. The enemy was at our gates. The incessant, imperative call of those days was "Win the War." And we won the war under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson.

But it is when the family is preoccupied that the robber breaks in and steals the wealth. Shall we forget who got this money about which so much is said? The people of this land have gotten this money, gotten it in return for labor and supplies, and these are the dear people who have cast Woodrow Wilson out for their own sin. No one has ever intimated that the president got any wealth. The people would not work for their country without exorbitant wages. They were insttiable in their greed. Like the grave, in their hunger for gold, they continually cried out for more, and more. The laboring classes repeatedly threatened to strike if more money were not forthcoming. This meant to starve the army in the field. They were given the money because money did not mean so much to us as the winning of the war, and the feeding of our boys. The very papers that recently have been so busy denouncing the President, during the war, published great, blistering editorials holding up to public execration the slackers at home who were robbing the government while our boys were dying upon the fields of sunny France.

Since the close of the war we have been blaming the President for evils which have followed every war that men have fought in all the ages past. War is always a moral catastrophe, and this one was no exception. The spectacle in this land today, is a humiliation, and a heart-break to every man who revers the name of God, and has hopes for the redemption of man, but it is not Woodrow Wilson's fault. The devil is loose and he is not yet chained. We will wait patiently to see the new administration if it fails to accomplish that much to be desired task, for only God Almighty can chain the devil when he gets loose.

We are told that Woodrow Wilson betrayed his country, that he was taken in by the wily politicians of Europe, and that he sold his country for an impossible dream; that he sought to commit this country to the policy of pulling the chestnuts out of the fire for the nations of the old world who would laugh at us for our pains. It may be true that the President had an over-confidence in the unselfishness of human nature, but he did not betray his country. No purer patriot ever lived than Woodrow Wilson. Every drop of his blood tingles with patriotic devotion to his fatherland. And yet it may be true that he believed that America could prosper by helping other nations, better than by fighting them. If that was foolish, blessed be the folly.

His best friends are willing to admit that Woodrow Wilson has made mistakes. Has ever a great man missed making mistakes. The dearest friends we ever had have faults which we wish they did not have, and no doubt they feel the same toward us. The chief fault as expressed against our President was that he was autocratic, and imperiled the liberties of the people. We believe that some of this criticism is just. Woodrow Wilson's autocracy was partly the result of circumstances, and partly resulted from his temperment. None of it was a wilful attempt to abuse the great power committed to his hands, for his own purposes.

War is autocratic. Republics cannot wage successful war. Power must be centralized before success can come to armies, and no nations waging war. Because we knew this we gave the President unprecedented power. We tried to escape autocracy in the armies upon the field, but Foch was the sign of our awakening. We won the war when we put an autocrat at the head of the allied armies.

But by temperament Woodrow Wilson is an autocrat. He cannot successfully use men because his genius makes him think ahead of men. They cannot see quickly and distinctly enough. We have said that in this man's heart is a dream, a beautiful dream of world brotherhood. He would banish war from the earth. He was obsessed, borne away, absorbed with this great dream. To accomplish that dream was to him the one real thing in the world. As we see it he was mighty near right. To destroy this vile thing forever from the earth is a bigger business than any other with which we are engaged. If we must go on being brutes forever, we will despair of the race.

Every dreamer is autocratic. To "follow the gleam" is the one worthwhile thing in the world; to make the world follow the gleam, the only business of life. In this spirit there can be no compromise that imperils it. A dreamer will die for his dream, but he will not compromise it, nor surrender it. Woodrow Wilson held on to his League of Peace, in spite of the ridicule, and persecution of his enemies. He held on because he could not let go. He will retire, but if his magnificent brain functions, he will weave for us new fancies of the golden age, and the weaving of those fancies will help to bring it on.

What we have written will not please some of our readers, but we have written because we ought to say this much for the man who has stood before the world for eight years as the head of the greatest nation on earth, and preached a height of noble living, and high and unselfish thinking such as no ruler ever preached before. He was a scholar in politics, we hear with much scorn, but politics is cleaner because a dreamer has injected his dream of sweetness and light into it.

Woodrow Wilson will come back. He will not hold office again we think, but he will come back as the prophet who saw in the face of God a message that he has delivered to the world, and in that day he will stand with the royal ones, who have opened a little wider the gates that separate this life of ours from the exultant life of love that rules and reigns in heaven. Like Robbie Burns the people have denied thee the bread of gratitude, but after awhile they will give thee a stone, pure white, to speak to later generations of the heroes of the past.

Big Fire At Millsboro—A $50,000 fire visited the business section of Millsboro, Del., last Saturday. Incendiarism is suspected. The town probably would have been wiped out had it not been for the quick arrival of help from other towns and a fortunate shift in the wind. A little after 1 o'clock smoke was discovered coming from three buildings closely joined together. The town being without adequate fire protection, an appeal for help was instantly telephoned to Laurel, Georgetown and Milford, and all responded.

A Resident Known To All Our Readers Relates An Experience

Readers of the Transcript have been told again and again of the merits of that reliable, time-proved kidney remedy—Doan's Kidney Pills. The experiences told are not those of unknown persons, living far away. The cases are Chestertown cases, told by Chestertown people.

S. F. Robinson, stationary engineer, Front street, says: "Besides being troubled with my kidneys, I suffered from backaches. The most annoying trouble was irregular action of my kidneys and it was accompanied by pain. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and found them the best medicine I had ever used. They gave me entire relief."

OVER FIVE YEARS LATER, Mr. Robinson added: "You can still use my testimonial as you have been doing in the past, as I have had no trouble since I was cured. I have had no occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills for some time."

Price 60c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Robinson had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.
