MUST PROPOSE AMID NOISE

Curious Marriage Custom That Still Prevails in Some of the Norwegian Districts.

Along the fjords of Norway the old customs are fast dying out, just as they seem swiftly to be passing in every other country of modern Europe. But in some of the fjord sections one may still witness a few of the old customs in all their ancient charm, and sometimes their oldtime whimsicality and love of rough play—for instance, in what happens when a young man proposes and during the wedding ceremony.

In the district known as Sogn it has been the custom for generations for the boys of the country-side to keep such close watch on their brothers that they know just when one is going to ask his sweetheart's parents for her hand. Hardly has the young man entered the house than from every side comes the roar of small cannon and the rattle of rifles fired in the air, and the ringing of bells and blowing of horns.

The day of the wedding, however, the bridegroom's old friends flock to his side and playfully endeavor to keep his courage high. That neither he nor the bride escapes without due share of teasing is clear in the fact that sometimes as many as 200 guests are at the wedding, and that the festivities may last an entire week.

The day when the nuptials are to be celebrated the bride and bridegroom, their parents and other relatives and the guests form in line. Headed by the fiddler they march to the doors of the church. It has happened that two or even three wedding parties meet either on the way or at the church. Then there is a notable competition between the fiddlers. Each tries to outdo the other.—Temple Manning in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

GREAT PLAYS' "FIRST NIGHTS"

Six Occasions That Stand Out Prominently in the Artistic History of France.

Perhaps the most striking events in the artistic history of France have been the first performances of certain of the great French plays. In a few cases, also, these occasions have marked the beginning of new epochs in the social history of that country.

There have, it appears, been but six unforgettable first nights since theaters were established in Paris. The first occurred in 1637, when Corneille's "Le Cid" took the capital by storm. Forty years later Racine's "Andromache" created a similar sensation. On the eve of the Revolution, in 1794, Beaumarchais' "Marriage of Figaro" was received with such delirious enthusiasm that three persons were stifled in the rush for seats. In 1830 Victor Hugo, in spite of the determined opposition of a large body of reactionaries, set all Paris in an uproar with his "Hernani." These names may be borne in mind: Corneille, Racine, Beaumarchais and Hugo. Three of them, at least, have no superiors in the history of French literature. Each has one amazing dramatic triumph to his credit. The other two of the six great first nights were December 28, 1897, and Feburary 7, 1910. The occasions were respectively the performances of "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "Chantecler," both by Edmond Rostand.—Philadelphia Ledger.

How Camel Got His Harelip.

In "The Women of Egypt" Mrs. Elizabeth Cooper, the author, says that when she decided to ride a camel and he was brought to the door she tried to make friends with him, and continues:

"I walked around him and examined him closely. He smiled at me with his harelip, which, if tales are true, he obtained legitimately. When Allah created the first camel he was lonely and went around moaning and groaning over his fate. It was then that the sour, dissatisfied look came to his face that is a distinguishing mark of all camels. Allah became sorry for him, seeing what a fine disposition was being ruined, so he sent a genie to tell him that a spouse was being created for him. The news delighted the lonely camel so intensely that he smiled and smiled until he split his lip, and it has remained thus ever since."
