Every Woman Likes To Beautify Her Home

The "instinct for the beautiful" is a part of every woman, and is most often expressed in her home.
She likes to embroider dainty pillows, bedspreads and towels and make richly colored lamp shades—and she plans to add glistening aluminum or enamel utensils that save time and make the kitchen beautiful—and attractive china and silver to her table—and soft rugs for living-rooms and sleeping-rooms—and colorful, homelike draperies of cretonne and silk to the windows—and she will find Miss Knight, of Hochschild, Kohn & Co., interested and eager to help.

In the Art Department are stamped bedspreads, pillow-tops and towels. Miss Knight will select a pretty design for you and send enough cotton or wool to complete the embroidery.

Miss Knight will visit the Kitchenware and China Sections in the Basement, if you wish. She will select samples of draperies and send descriptions and prices of rugs, curtains, odd chairs, card tables or anything else you may request. Write to her today.

HIS DUTY TO AID TRAVELERS

Postmaster of Three Hundred Years Ago Supplied Horses to Those Who Needed Them.

A postmaster of 300 years ago was a very different person to what he is today. Do you want to know how? Well, the postmaster today has to do almost entirely with letters and parcels and, in England, of course, with telegrams, too. But 300 years ago he had to do almost entirely with horses. Thus I wonder, says a writer in the New York Evening Post, if you know that William Brewster, the leader of the Mayflower Pilgrims, was for many years postmaster at Scrooby, a little village in England on the great North road, halfway between London and Berwick?

William Brewster, however, did not live in a little house in the village street, using the front room as a post office, as do many village postmasters today. He lived in a grand old house called Scrooby manor and his duty was to supply horses to all travelers who desired to hire them, for in those days, of course, all traveling that was not done on foot was done on horseback. He was appointed by the government and he had what 300 years ago was a very handsome salary, namely, 2s a day, besides what travelers used to pay him if they stayed for a night or so at Scrooby manor on their journey. It was in the great hall at Scrooby manor that the Pilgrims used to meet before they left England for Holland, whence, some ten years or so later, they sailed for America.

UNDOUBTEDLY HIS BY RIGHT

Boorish Stranger Surely Proved His Claim to Possession of That Matchbox Without Argument.

The car on an English railway was not overcrowded. There was a goodly number of persons sitting in it, but evidently there was not room for the fussy man who entered last.

He stood on every one's toes.

He pushed his luggage in every one's eyes and placed his heaviest bag on some one's hat.

He elbowed himself plenty of room on the side of the compartment.

"Infernal railway!" he muttered to the man next to him.

"Thank goodness," replied the stranger, "that you spoke first!"

"What do you mean?" asked the rude man.

"Well," said the stranger, handing him a gold matchbox, "I must give you this, sir."

"But," exclaimed the other, "we are complete strangers!"

"Yes, sir, I know that, but I am a member of a society, and we have subscribed for that matchbox, which we were going to give to a member whom we considered the rudest man on earth—but I think you deserve it far more than he does!"

Why Buried With Head to the West.

The usual posture of the dead is with the feet eastward and the head toward the west—the fitting attitude of those who look for their Lord, "Whose name is the East," and who will come to judgment in the regions of the dawn suddenly. But it was the ancient usage of the church that the martyr, the bishop, the saint, and even the priest, should occupy in their sepulture a position the reverse of the secular dead, and lie down with their feet westward and their heads to the rising sun. The position of the crozier and the cross on ancient sepulchers of the clergy record and reveal this fact. The doctrine suggested by such a burial was that these mighty men would be honored with a first resurrection, and as their Master came on from the East they were to arise and follow the Lamb as he went; inasmuch as they, with him, would advance to the judgment of the general multitudes, the ancients and the saints which were worthy to judge and reign. —From "Notes and Queries."

Famous French Song.

"Ca Ira" was the first popular song to spring out of the French Revolution. It was probably first sung in 1789 by the insurgents as they marched to Versailles. The music was that of a contra dance which was extremely popular under the name of "Carillon National." It was composed by a drummer in the orchestra of the opera house whose name was Becourt. The air was a great favorite with Queen Marie Antoinette. The words were suggested by Lafayette to Ladre, a street singer; he remembered them from hearing Benjamin Franklin say at various stages of the American Revolution when asked for news: "Ca, Ira, ca ira" ("it will go, it will go"). There are five stanzas with different refrains, becoming more ferocious as the revolution progressed.

Pens in History.

When quill pens were in use by all persons who knew how to write there was a good deal of discussion as to what kind of quills made the best pen. Goose quills were by long odds the most numerous, but some persons, especially those of the fashionable and more secluded sets, preferred swan quills. It is said that the only thing which distinguished them above goose quills was that they cost more. Kings and queens, when they knew how to write at all, usually preferred to sign their names with eagle quills. Queen Elizabeth always wrote with an eagle quill pen, so the story goes as told by those persons who have written of this lady.

Like the Poor and Taxes.

The pile of rocks to be broken was a very large one, thought the stonebreaker as he gazed at it disconsolately between his bites at a large sandwich of bread and cheese, recounts the London Morning Post. A minister came along and gave him a cheery "Good morning," remarking afterwards that he had a deal of work to get through yet. "Aye," said the eater, "them stones are like the Ten Commandments." "Why so?" inquired the genial parson. "You can go on breaking 'em," came the reply, "but you can't never get rid of 'em."

Last Sunday was Rally Day at Kennedyville M. P. Sunday School. The programme prepared by the Board of Young People's Work was used in part. It consisted of recitations, solos, and a class motion song, also several selections were sung by the school. The Supt., Mr. L. W. Ford, made some very appropriate remarks, welcoming visitors to the Rally and inviting the parents and members of the church to attend the regular sessions of the school. The pastor gave a brief talk on "What a Rally Means and to What we Should Rally." Mrs. George Glenn presided at the organ and was accompanied by the Chestertown orchestra, composed of Messrs. Bacon, Wheatley, Nichols and McMenamin. The services of the gentlemen were very much appreciated and their music enjoyed. They were given a rising vote of thanks by the school. At the 11 o'clock service the pastor used the Rally theme and preached on "The Great Command." In this service the orchestra assisted with the music. Dr. J. M. Sheridan was present and took part in the service. At the evening service a very interesting and instructive missionary meeting was held, led by Miss Emma Shafer. The topic of the meeting was "South America." The pastor gave a brief talk, after which Rev. B. B. Staats, of the Presbyterian Church, related some facts concerning conditions that prevail there, as given to him by one that resided in a South American city for a short time.
