A Parody on "Excelsior."

BY THE BARD OF "MARBLE HALL."

The shades of night were falling fast,
As thro' th' "monumental city" pass'd
A youth 'mid snow and ice who bore
A card of Smith & Bro.'s store
At Marble Hall.

His coat was torn, his pants below
Were furrowed here and there like snow,
With flags of truce that gaily shone
As he moved hastily along
To Marble Hall.

In other stores he saw the light
Glistening, glowing, warm and bright,
With eager steps he passed all others,
Resolved to buy of Smith & Brothers
At Marble Hall.

"Try not the space" the old man said,
"For there you're likely to be bled,"
Buy not up town the price is high—
The only place in town to buy
Is Marble Hall.

* * * *

Long since at eve as supperward
Some street was trodden by the 'Bard'
He heard the oft-repeated prayer
Steal out upon the stilly air
For Marble Hall.

Peeping—for once—beneath the screen
This youth (I knew by his clothes) was seen
Clasping unto his manly breast
As fair a maid as ever blessed
Marble Hall.

There in the twilight soft and gray,
Clasped in his arms I heard her say
(And then of course I came away,)
We owe our life with love's fruit fraught
To that fine suit of clothes you bought
At Marble Hall.
