ON THE SCREEN AT THE NEW LYCEUM

Smiley Burnette and Roy Rogers in a hilariously confusing scene from the new Republic Western Film, "Heart of the Golden West," which will show at the New Lyceum Theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 15, 16 and 17.

Newspaper Reporter Stars In Film

A newspaper man went to Hollywood to get away from writing. He is Joseph Cotten formerly a notable actor with Orson Welles' Mercury Theater group in New York City now an important screen player. With Hollywood studios abounding in former newspaper reporters, editors and critics engaged in turning out the film city's scripts and scenarios, Cotten is one Fourth Estater in a thousand. He quit gathering news to act, not to do more writing. His latest role is opposite Teresa Wright in Alfred Hitchcock's new Universal Thriller, "Shadow of a Doubt," coming to the New Lyceum Theatre next Mon., Tues., and Wed.

Cotten plays a romantic murderer who specializes in killing women. Detectives are closing in on him. He takes shelter with his sister, her husband and children in Santa Rosa, California. They have no idea of his real character when he arrives but, as the pursuit approaches, suspicion begins to grow. Patricia Collinge plays Cotten's sister, Henry Travers, her husband, Teresa Wright their eldest daughter. Macdonald Carey and Wallace Ford have prominent roles. Much of the picture was filmed in the streets, business buildings and homes of Santa Rosa.

"Shadow of a Doubt" was written as a screen play by Thornton Wilder, Sally Benson and Alma Reville from an original story by Gordon McDonell. The picture is presented by Jack H. Skirball Productions.

Basil Rathbone At New Lyceum

Basil Rathbone, kno wto be meticulous of dress and appearance and proud of it, refused to be seen in the Universal studio cafe during the making of his latest picture, "Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon." The star declared he could not face the stares of the other diners.

For his role as Holmes in the new detective thriller, at the New Lyceum next Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Rathbone donned a disguise which he claimed put him into the same class with Frankenstein and the Wolf Man.

Rathbone brought his own lunch to the studio and spent his noon hours in the sound recording laboratories. Nigel Bruce is his co-star in "Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon" which was directed by Roy William Neill.

Roy Rogers In Film Next Friday, Saturday

With an unusually fine story, elaborate production values, an outstanding supporting cast and most capable directional handling, Republic's latest Roy Rogers offering, "Heart of the Golden West," which opens at the New Lyceum for Next Thursday, Friday and Saturday., seems destined for widespread popularity and box office success.

The picture was filmed as an "extra-budgeted special" meaning that it has been endowed with the type of production values usually accorded only "feature" productions.

For comedy relief, Roy has not only his usual screen partner, George "Gabby" Hayes, but also Smiley Burnette, the outsize comic so long associated with the Gene Autry pictures before Gene entered the U. S. armed forces.

And not only does Roy have his "Sons of the Pioneers" for music, but also the famed "Hall Johnson Choir" which needs no introduction to local audiences.

Ruth Terry cannot fail to win myriads of new fans to her already impressive collection through her portrayal of the spritely "Mary Lou Popen," daughter of the Southern Colonel who bears a natural reluctance toward having his river boats turned into cattle transports, no matter how worthy the cause.

Walter Catlett is outstanding as the Colonel, and Edmund MacDonald should be especially commended for his convincing portrayal of Ross Lambert, the unscrupulous shipping magnate.
