"Sentinals Of The Skyways" Keep Vigilence In Kent County

For the past eighteen months, groups of men and women in the various parts of Kent County have stood guard duty over the skyways as a part of the armed protection of the Atlantic Seaborad.

Organized in the summer of 1941, and with a ten day practice period during October of that year, the entire setup including seven observation posts went into action immediately following the eventful bombing of Pearl Harbor and six of these posts are on the job doing important guard duty of the skyways of Kent County and are making more secure the tremendous war production plants along this section of the Atlantic Seaboard. This work has not been easy as in many instances this 24 hour guard duty as some of the posts has fallen upon the shoulders of a few faithful individuals, who are awaiting official word from Army leaders' that the work is unnecessary rather than take it from the local would-be military expert. Thousands of members of the armed forces are also working in the various departments of the aircraft warning service whose rank ranges from general to private which is evidence that the Army considers it of vital importance for the carrying on of the war. Evidence of the above is the following statement recently made by General H. H. Arnold, Commanding General, Army Air Forces.

Every American who hopes and prays that enemy bombs may never strike American soil owes a debt of gratitude to those brave men and women who form our Aircraft Warning System.

"A half million volunteers, unselfish and brave, are devoting long hours to the task of scanning our skies against enemy raiders. Along our coastlines, on farms, on mountain tops these volunteer observers word at odd hours, in rain and storm, ever on the alert. Their work is tedious. No glory is theirs except that of self-satisfaction and a realization that they are playing a part along with our Air Force pilots, gunners, bombardiers and technical crews in the survival of our nation.

"More than ever, I want to caution the volunteers of our Aircraft Warning System to be on the alert. The Nazis would like to raid our cities for many reasons. There is the question of Nazi morale. A raid on our shores would aid Hitler's cause. Coming events might also lead Hitler to attack our shores in order to keep much of our aircraft for defensive measures on this side of the ocean instead of freeing our bombers for use over Berlin. You men and women are the eyes and ears of our vast protective air-raid net. Your obligation is great. As Americans, you are equal to that task."

This coming from the commanding officer of the greatest air force in the world should supercede statements by local strategists. The question might arise as to what this means to the average resident of Kent County. The answer is that more volunteers are needed to relieve and shorten the hours of those who are carrying on. The setup is simplified so that almost anyone who can see and hear are eligible to apply for this all-important war duty.

New Recognition System

In addition to the services to one's country in time of war the newly inaugurated recognition system in which the observer may report the type of plane at the end of each plane report makes possible a course of training in the recognition of planes that is not only interesting but may be a life saver in case this coast is invaded from the air. This new syetem does not mean that planes must be recognized or that those observers who, for reasons of their own, do not wish to carry out the recognition part of the report, should not feel that their services are no longer wanted. They are not only badly wanted but are badly needed as their experience in giving the main part of the report is a big factor in the armed protection of the area and one need only report unknown in the recognition column.

The appeal for more observers comes to you from the District Director of Kent County, the Area Supervisor the chief observers and assistant chief observers.

Volunteers may see any of the following Chief Observers, dependant upon the location of their homes.

Millington—Harry R. Rasin.

Blacks—Mr. or Mrs. William Sutton.

Lynch—W. R. Stavely.

Chestertown—W. R. Nicholson or Mrs. John Speicher.

Fairlee—Rev. C. R. Strausburg.

Rock Hall—Mr. or Mrs. Cecil Crouch.

The German and Italian war prisoners whom it is proposed to use on Maryland farms this year can also be advantageously employed on our 125,000 acres of State Forests during the winter months, State Forester Joseph F. Kaylor declared at a meeting of labor officials held this week at College Park under the auspices of Dr. T. B. Symons, Director of Farm Extension Work. On State-owned lands in Garrett County, on the Eastern Shore, and in Southern Maryland are thousands of cords of pulpwood, a critical war material, that could be got out if labor was made available, Mr. Kaylor pointed ont. Cutting would be in accordance with forestry principles. Since the Army requires that war prisoners be employed on a year-round basis, and farm work covers only three seasons, the State Forests provide an excellent opportunity to use the prisoners during the off-season in an important war activity.

Mr. Kaylor also told the conference that if private owners of timberland wish to get out wood products, prisoners could be assigned to them, under the direction of experts from the Department of State Forests and Parks.

Philosophy of Governments Set Forth in New Fantasy

Antoine de Saint-Exupery's Delightful Fairy Story, "The Little Prince," Holds More Than Artistry for Adult and Child Alike.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

On a June day, when a gentle breeze brought the scent of new-mown grass in through the White House windows, President Roosevelt sat at his desk and read slowly to a group of correspondents from a typewritten sheet. It wasn't a formal document but it was an historic one—its purpose was to remind the Italian people that the military campaign against them which had just scored another Allied victory, Pantelleria, was the result of the misconduct of their rulers.

The message has been variously interpreted since, but to me, it contained one significant point—the reminder of the coming birth of a new nation; the new Italy which will emerge when the chains of arrogance and brute aggression which bind her are broken. There has been much talk about post-war policing of the re-made world; little thought of the philosophy which will underlie the forms which the reborn governments must follow. To me, such a philosophy is set forth in a work of pure fantasy. A hopeful note for nations and men is sounded in this delightful fairy tale by an author who found spiritual rebirth in the tragedy of the fall of his own nation.

I refer to Antoine de Saint-Exupery and his latest work, "The Little Prince."

Those who have read his "Night Flight," "Wind, Sand and Stars" and "Flight to Arras" are not surprised that he could create a fairy tale as delicate as this. Reviewers have disagreed as to whether it is for children or for adults. I believe it is for both, like "Alice in Wonderland." But the adult will find in "The Little Prince" something more than artistry and the children will sense that, too, I think.

Saint-Exupery is a brilliant aviator who built up night flying for the French airlines in South America. He fought against the Germans—"Flight to Arras" is the remarkable book which tells of that experience. He is now back with the French army in Africa, scene of the opening of "The Little Prince."

The Prince's Story

"Six years ago," the author says, "I made a forced landing in the Sahara alone, a thousand miles from help, and faced the necessity of repairing my motor by myself within the number of days my drinking water would last. The first morning, I was awakened by a determined but gentle voice which said: 'If you please, draw me a sheep.' "

So Exupery learned the story of how the Little Prince had found out what is really important in life.

The Little Prince is at once a delicate wisp of fancy, something so sheer that at moments he seems to float like a piece of thistledown before your imagination—again, he has all the reality of truth itself, he is eternal childhood, all that is gentle, and confiding and lovable, with the faint shadow of sorrow on his winsome face, he is the tug at your heartstrings that comes when youth looks at you in wide-eyed confidence, reaches up to take your hand—the same reminiscent tug when you look back and see the surprised and longing sorrow in the eyes of your own lost youth.

The Little Prince lived far away, it seems, on a tiny planet with three volcanoes so small that he cooked his breakfast on one of them. A flower came to his planet and the Little Prince loved her and cared for her but he couldn't understand her and so he left to try to find out why. He finally reached the earth, and here the fox taught him.

The Little Prince had never seen a fox—"Come and play with me," he said, "I am so unhappy." "I cannot play with you," the fox said, "I am not tamed." The Little Prince did not understand. He told the fox that he was looking for friends and asked him what tame meant.

Philosophy Of A Fox

"It is an act too often neglected," said the fox, "it means to establish ties.....to me, you are still nothing but a little boy who is just like a hundred other little boys. And I have no need of you. To you, I am nothing more than a fox like a hundred thousand other little foxes. But if you tame me, then we shall need each other. To me, you will be unique in the whole world. To you, I shall be unique in the whole world."

"I am beginning to understand," said the Little Prince, "there is a flower.....I think she has tamed me."

"If you tame me," the fox went on, " it will be as if the sun came to shine on my life. I shall know the sound of a step that will be different from all others. Other steps send me hurrying back underneath the ground. Yours will call me like music out of my burrow. And then look: you see the grain fields down yonder. I do not eat bread. Wheat is of no use to me. The grain fields say nothing to me and that is sad. But you have hair that is the color of gold. Think how wonderful that will be when you have tamed me. The grain which is also golden will bring me back the thought of you. And I shall love to listen to the wind in the wheat....."

The fox gazed at the Little Prince for a long time. "Please—tame me," he said. "I want to very much," said the Little Prince, "but I haven't much time, I have friends to discover and a great many things to understand."

"One only understands the things one tames," said the fox, "men have no more time to understand anything. They buy things already made at the shops but there is no shop anywhere where one can buy friendship, and so men have no friends any more. If you want a friend, tame me....."

And so the Little Prince did, and another day when he came back, the fox said: "It would have been better if you had come back at the same hour. If, for example, you come at four o'clock in the afternoon, then at three o'clock I shall begin to be happy. I shall feel happier and happier as the hour advances. At four o'clock, I shall already be worrying and jumping about. I shall show you how happy I am .But if you come just anytime, I shall never know at what hour my heart is to be ready to greet you."

But finally, the Little Prince had to go.

"Ah", said the fox, "I shall cry."

Source Of Comfort

"It is your own fault," said the Little Prince, "I never wished you any sort of harm; but you wanted me to tame you." "Yes, that is so," said the fox. "Then it has done you no good at all." "It has done me no good," said the fox, "because of the color of the wheat fields."

And there, I think, perhaps some of you may find comfort—in the memories that come from the wheat fields, for the common and the beautiful things that remind you of someone from whom, perhaps this war has parted you.

That is only a flash I have given you of the story of "The Little Prince" which is not written for children only but for those who have the faith of little children and the understanding to see how tragedy can bring forth something which can light the long shadows which it leaves—out of the tragedy of his nation and the searchings of his own soul came this charming fantasy from the pen of the soldier-writer with the secret he learned from the Little Prince who learned it from the fox—

"It is only with the heart that one can see rightly: what is essential is invisible to the eye."

Dairy Of A Broadcaster

A postcard signed by a fictitious name, dated the day Pantelleria fell, contained this statement:

"Italy so far has got the best territory of the world: most of France; the richest prize of the war: Jugoslavia; the greatest strategical area in the world: Greece and her islands. Italy will dictate the peace, save the U. S. A. and get two-thirds of Africa, meanwhile Mussolini is Supreme everywhere. Italy got all and lost least, can fight 1,000 years."

Some 7,000,000 pounds of bombs were dropped on Pantelleria island from June 1 to June 11 when it capitulated.

BRIEFS . . . by Baukhage

Soldiers make an average of eight moves by railroad between induction and embarkation for service overseas.

Raido France, General Henri Giraud's station at Algiers, has reported that because "young German students are getting stirred up" a Gestapo agent has been stationed in "every" German university.

Because many types of air raid shelters now in use are scant protection against Allied heavy bombs, the German people have been told to hurry the construction of new underground shelters.

NO SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC THIS YEAR

The Sunday School of Christ Methodist Church voted unanimously last Sunday not to attempt to have its annual picnic this year. In view of the fact that many children throughout the world denied, not merely luxuries, but necessary food, many actually starving, the children of the school voted equally with the adults in a most beautiful spirit to forego the annual treat and to send the money usually spent on the treat to the suffering children of the world through the medium of the Overseas Relief Commission.
