Probably one of the most popular ways to use up left-over bits of meat is to prepare it as a stuffing for peppers. There are so many various and assorted combinations for this tasty dish, that one might wonder why bother to give another? But this particular one is so simple, and so good, that it is really well worth the knowing.

STUFFED PEPPERS

6 green peppers
1¼ cups minced cooked meat (veal, chicken or ham)
1¼ cups moistened bread crumbs
Salt and pepper
1 tablespoon fat
1 cup water or stock

Cut a slice from steam end of each pepper. Remove seeds and parboil peppers 10 minutes. Mix minced cooked meat with moistened bread crumbs, add salt pepper, melted fat and onion. Stuff peppers with mixtuer and place in baking pan. Add water or stock. Bake in moderate oven (375 F.) 30 minutes, basting frequently. Serves 6.

Every farm, city and town business should keep books. Swift & Company would have to whether it wanted to or not. It must make accurate reports to its 60,000 shareholders, must know whether it is making or losing money. And then, at the end of the year the company must make accurate statements of the year's results to the United States Government for income tax returns as well as for other purposes.

Persons not connected with the management of Swift & Company go over its books and check the accuracy of the figures from which Swift & Company's financial reports and income tax returns are prepared. These outside persons are Certified Public Accountants. They are licensed by the state, which certifies them as accounting and auditing experts.

It is in this way that the accuracy of figures published by Swift & Company is verified to all those interested in knowing the facts about the meat packing business as conducted by this company.
