Gen. Grant's Last Speech.

The joint committee appointed by the two houses of Congress waited upon Gen. Grant on Saturday last and officially notified him of his election as President of the United States. General Grant replied:

"I can promise the committee that it will be my endeavor to call around me as assistants such men only as I think will carry out the principles which you have said the country desires to be successful—economy, retrenchment, faithful collection of the revenue, and payment of the public debt. If I should fail in my first choice, I shall not at any time hesitate to make a second, or even a third trial, with the concurrence of the Senate, who have the confirming power. I should just as soon remove one of my own appointees as the appointee of my predecessor. It would make no difference.

"There is one matter that I might properly speak of here, and that is the selection of a cabinet. I have always felt that it would be rather indelicate to announce or even to consult with the gentlemen whom I thought of inviting to positions in my cabinet before the official declaration of the result of the election was made, although I presumed that there was no doubt about what that declaration would be.—But after consideration I have come to the conclusion that there is not a man in the country who could be invited to a place in the cabinet without the friends of some other gentleman making an effort to secure the position; not that there would be any objection to the party named, but that there would be others whom they had set their hearts upon having in the place. I can say that much from the great number of requests that come to me, in writing and otherwise, for this particular person, or that one, from different sets and delegations. If announced in advance, efforts would be made to change my determination; and, therefore, I have come to the conclusion not to announce whom I am going to invite to seats in the cabinet until I send in their names to the Senate for confirmation. If I say anything to them about it, it will certainly not be more than two or three days previous to sending in their names. I think it well to make a public declaration of this to the committee so that my intention may be known."

THE REMAINS OF JOHN WILKES BOOTH.—The Baltimore Sun of Wednesday says: The disinterment of the remains of John Wilkes Booth and their removal to this city, was conducted so quietly on Monday evening that but few persons in Washington were aware of the incidents attending it. Mr. John H. Weaver, undertaker, went to Washington, on Friday last, with a letter from Edwin Booth to the President making a request for the remains.—The President read the letter and directed his visitors to call again on Monday, at which time they did call, and the proper order for the body was given, and they proceeded to the arsenal, when the body was taken up and delivered to them about five o'clock. A coffin was procured, and the remains were placed in it and brought to this city. The box in which the remains were originally interred was much decayed, and on its top was found the painted board with Booth's name, and on taking off the lid the remains were found to be wrapped in two or three gray blankets, and in a tolerable state of preservation. The coat and vest were found to be in good condition, as also the pantaloons, except that a portion of one leg appeared to have been cut off. The cavalry boot on his left leg was in extra good condition, looking to be nearly new, and the shoe on the right foot—a common brogan—had a slit cut down the front, but otherwise was in good condition.

The remains for the present are to be placed in Mr. Weaver's vault in Greenmount Cemetery, and will hereafter be transfered to the Baltimore Cemetery.

THE HUSH IN WASHINGTON.—It has been observed that there has not been for many years in Washington, during the two months immediately preceding the inauguration of a President, such an extraordinary calm as is now prevailing there. The composure of General Grant, amidst elements of agitation which would throw the most of men off their balance, seems to have become infectious. The equanimity of this practical philosopher, who accepts the chief magistracy of the first republic of the world with as little signs of elation as if it were the freedom of a city in a gold snuff-box, and the marvellous reticence which defies the most expert political picklocks to lay open his cabinet purposes, have thrown a spell over the public mind in Washington which inclines it to be quiet and, perchance, somewhat meditative. There is certainly something impressive and worth reflecting about in the phenomenon of a man, towards whom all the great currents of popular attention and feeling are attracted, remaining as impassive and noiseless as a rock in the midst of an agitated sea, in an unstable element, but not of it. Perhaps it is not strange that, under such circumstances, even the most garrulous politicians should consent to "let expressive silence muse his praise." There must be a good deal of inward perturbation and anxious exercise of mind among that large number of patriotic gentlemen who are willing that their personal services shall be availed of to give success to General Grant's administration, but who are left with as little knowledge of the future as the purchaser of a lottery ticket, or a man who has made an investment in a prize-gift enterprise. The oracle remains silent on the subject of places in the cabinet, which so many favored aspirants are sleepless about, or only opens its mouth to say that it shall remain silent till such time as it is deemed proper to speak. These are comforting words: "Happy are they who expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed." Yet it is clear that General Grant is not in the habit of saying nothing because he has nothing to say, as his few words, on accepting the election as President, proved to the unspeakable dismay of those who expected him to administer the government in the exclusive interest of a political party, and to be in the hands of the leaders thereof like clay in the hands of the potter. "Economy, retrenchment, faithful collection of the revenue and payment of the public debt," and appointments to office of "such men only as he thought would carry out these principles." Awful words to be heard in that atmosphere! No wonder there is a preternatural hush about Washington like that which sometimes precedes a hurricane.

THE New York Evening Post (Radical) thus laments the condition of its party: When a political party has a great predominance, it is pretty sure to draw to itself the rogues, the unscrupulous, and the self-seekers in the community. That is the danger of such an ascendency. A party may become the tool of corrupt men, because its leaders are careless and overconfident of their strength, and because the rogues and self-seekers are attracted to it from a desire so use it as their instrument. When a party becomes corrupt, the people, who endure for a while with that patience which short-sighted politicians are so sure to misunderstand, presently leave it and take up the other party, even if they run the risk of faring but little better by the change. It seems to many thoughtful friends of the Republican party that it is running just now a good deal of risk of such a popular desertion. It has amongst its leaders wise, prudent and good men, but these in many cases, over-ridden by glib-tongued demagogues, by unscrupulous speculators, and by men too ignorant for these times, which demand, at least, a decent knowledge of political science in the legislator.

GENERAL GRANT AND THE TENURE OF OFFICE LAW.—The Tribune gives the substance of a conversation with General Grant, which, it says, it has no reason to doubt the substantial truth of, in which he emphatically condemned the waste by public printing and other congressional extravagance, the franking privilege and the continuance of the tenure-of-office law. It was natural and reasonable that General Grant should wish the repeal of this law. It will prove a great embarrassment to him.

STAMP DUTY ON LEASES.—The following decision of Deputy Commissioner Harland, with regard to the proper stamp duty on a lease of a furnished house, will be interesting to all property holders: "The stamp duty upon a lease of a furnished house should be calculated upon the annual rental value of the house unfurnished, with an agreement stamp, (five cents for each sheet of paper,) in addition, for the furniture."
